86th CONGRESS...1st SESSION PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGES

State of Union

Economic Report

Budget Message

STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE URGES CONGRESS TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's State of the Union message, as delivered to a joint session of Congress Jan. 9:

Thank you very much for the warmth of your welcome. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, to you both a happy birthday.

Members of the 86th Congress and friends:

First I should like to assure the delegation from our newest state, Alaska, of my satisfaction that it now begins its participation with all of you in the work of Congress for the benefit of the United States. And may I voice the hope that before my term of office is ended I may have the opportunity and the great satisfaction of seeing the 50th star in our national flag.

Now, Members of Congress, this is the moment when Congress and the Executive annually begin their cooperative work to build a better America. One basic purpose unites us: to promote strength and security, side by side with liberty and opportunity.

As we meet today, in the 170th year of the Republic, our Nation must continue to provide -- as indeed all other free governments have had to do throughout time -- a satisfactory answer to a question as old as history. It is: Can government based upon liberty and the God-given rights of man, permanently endure when ceaselessly challenged by a dictatorship, hostile to our mode of life, and controlling an economic and military strength of great and growing power?

For us the answer has always been found, and is still found, in the devotion, the vision, the courage and the fortitude of our people. Moreover, we face this challenge not as a single powerful nation, but as one that has in recent decades reached a position of recognized leadership in the free world. We have arrived at this position of leadership in an era of remarkable productivity and growth. It is also a time when man's power of mass destruction has reached fearful proportions.

KEEPING THE PEACE

Possession of such capabilities helps create world suspicion and tension. We, on our part, know that we seek only a just peace for all, with aggressive designs against no one. Yet we realize that there is uneasiness in the world because of a belief on the part of peoples that through arrogance, miscalculation, the fear of attack, catastrophic war could be launched.

Keeping the peace in today's world more than ever calls for the utmost in the Nation's resolution, wisdom, steadiness and unremitting effort. We cannot build peace through desire alone. Moreover, we have learned the bitter lesson that international agreements historically considered by us as sacred, are regarded in Communist doctrine and in practice to be mere scraps of paper. The most recent proof of their disdain of international obligations, solemnly undertaken, is their announced intention to abandon their responsibilities respecting Berlin.

As a consequence of these actions, we can have no confidence in any treaty to which Communists are a party except where such a treaty provides within itself for self-enforcing mechanisms. Indeed, the demonstrated disregard of the Communists of their own pledges is one of the greatest obstacles to world success in substituting the rule of law for rule by force.

Yet step by step we must strengthen the institutions of peace -- a peace that rests upon justice, a peace that depends upon a deep knowledge and clear understanding by all peoples, including our own, of the causes and consequences of possible failure in this great purpose. To achieve this peace we seek to prevent war at any place and in any dimension. If, despite our best efforts, a local dispute should flare into armed hostilities, the next problem would be to keep the conflict from spreading, and so compromising freedom. In support of these objectives we maintain forces of great power and flexibility.

Our formidable air striking forces are a powerful deterrent to general war. Large and growing portions of these units can depart from their bases in a matter of minutes. Similar forces are included in our naval fleets. Ground and other tactical formations can move with swiftness and precision, when requested by friendly and responsible governments, to help curb threatened aggression. The stabilizing influence of this capacity has been dramatically demonstrated more than once over the past year.

Our military and related scientific progress has been highly gratifying. Great strides have been made in the development of ballistic missiles. Intermediate-range missiles are now deployed in operational units. The Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile program has been marked by rapid development as evidenced by recent successful tests. Missile training units have been established and launching sites are far along in construction. New aircraft that fly at twice the speed of sound are entering our squadrons.

We have successfully placed five satellites in orbit, which have gathered information of scientific importance never before available. Our latest satellite illustrates our steady advance in rocketry and foreshadows new developments in world-wide communications. Warning systems constantly improve. Our atomic submarines have shattered endurance records and made historic voyages under the North Polar Sea.

A major segment of our national scientific and engineering communities is working intensively to achieve new and greater developments. But we must remember, advance in military technology requires adequate financing, of course; but even more it requires talent and time.

Now all this I give only as a matter of history; as a record of our progress in space and ballistic missile fields in no more than four years of intensive effort. At the same time we clearly recognize that some of the recent Soviet accomplishments in this particular technology are indeed brilliant.

Under the law enacted last year the Department of Defense is being reorganized to give the Secretary of Defense full authority over the military establishment. Greater efficiency, more cohesive efforts and speedier reaction to emergencies, are among the many advantages we are already noting from these changes. Now these few highlights point up our steady military gains. We are rightfully gratified by the achievements they represent. But we must remember that these imposing armaments are purchased at great cost.

NATIONAL SECURITY COSTS

National security programs account for nearly 60 percent of the entire Federal budget for this coming fiscal year. Modern weapons are exceedingly expensive.

The over-all cost of introducing Atlas into our armed forces will average $35 million per missile on the firing line.

This year we are investing an aggregate of close to $7 billion in missile programs alone.

Other billions go for research, development, test and evaluation of new weapons systems.

Our latest atomic submarines will cost $50 million each, while some special types will cost three times as much.

We are now ordering fighter craft which are priced at 50 times as much as the fighters of World War II.

We are buying certain bombers that cost their weight in gold exactly.

These sums are tremendous, even when compared with the marvelous resiliency and the capacity of our economy. Such expenditures demand both balance and perspective in our planning for defense. At every turn, we must weigh, judge and select. Needless duplication of weapons and forces must be avoided.

We must guard against feverish building of vast armaments to meet glibly predicted moments of so-called "maximum peril." The threat we face is not sporadic or dated: it is continuous. Hence we must not be swayed in our calculations either by groundless fear or by complacency.

We must avoid extremes, for vacillation between extremes, is inefficient, costly, and destructive of morale. In these days of unceasing technological advance we must plan our defense expenditures systematically and with care, fully recognizing that obsolescence compels the never-ending replacement of older weapons with new ones.

The defense budget for the coming year has been planned on the basis of these principles and considerations. Over these many months I have personally participated in its development. The aim is a sensible posture of defense. The secondary aim is increased efficiency and avoidance of waste. Both are achieved by this budgetary plan.

Working by these guidelines I believe with all my heart that America can be as sure of the strength and efficiency of her armed forces as she is, and has always been, of their loyalty. I am equally sure that the Nation will thus avoid useless expenditures which, in the name of security, might tend to undermine the economy and, therefore, the Nation's safety.

Our own vast strength is only a part of that required for dependable security. Because of this we have joined with nearly 50 nations in collective security arrangements. In these common undertakings each nation is expected to contribute what it can in sharing the heavy load. Each supplies part of a strategic deployment to protect the forward boundaries of freedom. Constantly we seek new ways to make more effective our contribution to this system of collective security. Recently I have asked a committee of eminent Americans of both parties to reappraise our military assistance programs and the relative emphasis which should be placed on military and economic aid. I am hopeful that preliminary recommendations of this committee will be available in time in shaping the Mutual Security Program for the coming fiscal year.

EXPANDING ECONOMY

Any survey of the free world's defense structure cannot fail to impart a feeling of regret that so much of our effort and resources must be devoted to armaments. At Geneva and elsewhere we continue to seek technical and other agreements that may help to open up, with some promise, the issues of international disarmament. America will never give up the hope that eventually all nations can, with mutual confidence, drastically reduce these non-productive expenditures.

The material foundation of our national safety is a strong and expanding economy. This we have -- and this we must maintain. Only with such an economy can we be secure and simultaneously provide for the well-being of our people. A year ago, the Nation was experiencing a decline in employment and in output. Today that recession is fading into history, and this without gigantic, hastily improvised public works projects or untimely tax reductions. A healthy and vigorous recovery has been underway since last May. New homes are being built at the highest rate in several years. Retail sales are at peak levels. Personal income is at an all-time high.

The marked forward thrust of our economy reaffirms our confidence in competitive enterprise. But -- clearly -- wisdom and prudence in both the public and private sectors of the economy are always necessary.

The outlook is this: 1960 commitments for our armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission and mutual security exceed $47 billion. In the foreseeable future they are not likely to be significantly lower. With an annual population increase of three million other governmental costs are bound to mount.

After we have provided wisely for our military strength, we must judge how to allocate our remaining Government resources most effectively to promote our well-being and our economic growth. Federal programs that will benefit all citizens are moving forward.

Next year we will be spending increased amounts on health programs; on Federal assistance to science and education; on the development of the Nation's water resources; on the renewal of urban areas; and on our vast system of Federal-aid highways. Each of these additional outlays is being made necessary by the surging growth of America.

Let me illustrate. Responsive to this growth, Federal grants and long-term loans to assist 14 major types of capital improvements in our cities will total over $2 billion in 1960 -- and this figure is double the expenditure of two years ago. The major responsibility for development in these fields rests in localities, even though the Federal Government will continue to do its proper part in meeting the genuine needs of a burgeoning population.

But the progress of our economy can more than match the growth of our needs. We need only to act wisely and confidently.

Here, I hope you will permit me to digress long enough to express something that has been much on my mind. As I said at the beginning, the basic question facing us today is more than survival -- that is, the military defense of national life and territory. It is the preservation of a way of life. We must meet the world challenge and at the same time permit no stagnation in America. Stagnation we cannot afford. Unless we progress, we regress.

We can successfully sustain security and remain true to our heritage of freedom if we clearly visualize the tasks ahead and set out to perform them with resolution and vigor. We must first define these tasks and then understand what we must do to accomplish them. If progress is to be steady we must have long-term guides extending far ahead, certainly five, possibly even 10 years. They must reflect the knowledge that before the end of five years we will have a population of more than 190 million people. They must be goals that stand high, and so inspire every citizen to climb always toward mounting levels of moral, intellectual and material strength. Every advance toward them cannot fail to stir pride in the individual and national achievements.

Now to define these goals, I intend to mobilize help from every available source. We need more than politically ordained national objectives if we are to challenge the best efforts of free men and women. A group of selfless, able and devoted individuals, outside of government, could effectively participate in making the necessary appraisal of the potentials of our future. The result would be the establishment of national goals that would not only spur us on to our finest efforts but would meet the stern test of practicality. The committee I've planned will comprise educators and representatives of labor, management, finance, the professions, agriculture and every other kind of useful activity.

Such a study would update and supplement, in the light of continuous changes in our society and its economy, the monumental work of the Committee on Recent Social Trends which was appointed in 1931 by President Hoover. Its report has stood the test of time and has had a beneficial influence on national development. (See box, next page)

The new committee would be concerned, among other things, with the acceleration of our economy's growth and the living standards of our people, their health and education, their better assurance of life and liberty and their greater opportunities. It would also be concerned with methods to meet such goals and what levels of government -- local, state, or Federal -- might or should be particularly concerned.

NEW COMMITTEE'S STUDIES

As one example, consider our schools, operated under the authority of local communities and states. In their capacity and in their quality they conform to no recognizable standards. In some places facilities are ample, in others meager. Pay of teachers ranges between wide limits, from the adequate to the shameful. As would be expected, quality of teaching varies just as widely. But to our teachers we commit the most valuable possession of the Nation and of the family -- our children. We must have teachers of competence. To obtain and hold them we need standards. We need a national goal. And once established I am certain that public opinion would compel steady progress toward its accomplishment.

Such studies would be helpful, I believe, to government at all levels and to all individuals. The goals so established could help us see our current problems, needs in perspective. And they would spur progress.

We do not forget, of course, that our Nation's progress and fiscal integrity are interdependent and inseparable. We can afford everything we clearly need, but we cannot afford one cent of waste. We must examine every item of governmental expense critically. To do otherwise would betray our Nation's future. Thrift is one of the characteristics that has made this Nation great. Why should we ignore it now?

We must avoid any contribution to inflationary processes, which could disrupt sound growth in our economy. Prices have displayed a welcome stability in recent months and, if we are wise and resolute, we will not tolerate inflation in the years to come. But history makes clear the risks inherent in any failure to deal firmly with the basic causes of inflation. Two of the most important of these are the wage-price spiral and continued deficit financing. Inflation would reduce job opportunities, price us out of world markets, shrink the value of savings and penalize the thrift so essential to finance a growing economy.

Inflation is not a Robin Hood, taking from the rich to give to the poor. Rather, it deals most cruelly with those who can least protect themselves. It strikes hardest those millions of our citizens whose incomes do not quickly rise with the cost of living. And when prices soar, the pensioner and the widow see their security undermined, the man of thrift sees his savings melt away; the white-collar worker, the minister and the teacher see their standards of living dragged down.

Inflation can be prevented. But this demands statesmanship on the part of business and labor leaders and of government at all levels. We must encourage the self-discipline, the restraint necessary to curb the wage-price spiral and, except only in critical emergency, we must meet current costs from current revenue.

To minimize the danger of future soaring prices and to keep our economy sound and expanding, I shall present to the Congress certain proposals.

● First, I shall submit a balanced budget for the next year, a year that is expected to be the most prosperous of our history to date. It is a realistic budget with wholly attainable objectives. If we cannot live within our means during such a time of rising prosperity, the hope of fiscal integrity will fail. If we persist in living beyond our means we make it difficult indeed for every family in our land to balance his own household budget. But to live within our means would be a tangible demonstration to ourselves and to others of the self-discipline needed to assure a stable dollar.

Now the Constitution entrusts the Executive with many functions, but the Congress -- the Congress alone -- has the power of the purse. Ultimately upon the Congress rests responsibility for determining the scope and amount of Federal spending. But by working together, the Congress and the Executive can keep a balance between income and outgo. If this is done there is real hope that we can look forward to a time in the foreseeable future when needed tax reforms can be accomplished.

TAX REVISION

In this hope, I am requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare appropriate proposals for revising, at the proper time, our tax structure, to remove inequities and to enhance incentives for all Americans to work, to save, and to invest. Such recommendations will be made as quickly as our fiscal condition permits. And these prospects will be brightened, I assure you, if 1960 expenditures do not exceed the levels recommended.

● Second, I shall recommend to the Congress that the Chief Executive be given the responsibility either to approve or to veto specific items in appropriations and authorization bills. I assure you, gentlemen, that I know that this recommendation has been made time and again by every President that has appeared in this hall for many years. But, I say this: It's still one of the most important corrections that could be made in our annual expenditure program because this would save tax dollars.

● Third, to reduce Federal operations in an area where private enterprise can do the job, I shall recommend the legislation for greater flexibility in extending Federal credit, and in improving the procedures under which private credits are insured or guaranteed. Present practices have needlessly added large sums to Federal expenditures.

● Fourth, action is required to make more effective use of the large Federal expenditures for agriculture and to achieve greater fiscal control in this area.

Outlays of the Department of Agriculture for the current fiscal year for the support of farm prices on a very few farm products, will exceed $5 billion. This is a sum equal to approximately two-fifths of the net income of all farm operators in the United States. By the end of this fiscal year it is estimated that there will be in Government hands surplus farm products worth about $9 billion. And by July 1, 1959, Government expenditures for storage, interest and handling of its agricultural inventory will reach a rate of $1 billion a year.

This level of expenditures for farm products could be made willingly for a temporary period if it were leading to a sound solution of the problem. Unfortunately this is not true. We need new legislation. In the past I have sent messages to the Congress requesting greater freedom for our farmers to manage their own farms and greater freedom for markets to reflect the wishes of producers and consumers. Legislative changes that followed were appropriate in direction but did not go far enough. The situation calls for prompt and forthright action. Recommendations for action will be contained in a message to be transmitted to the Congress shortly.

Now these fiscal and related actions will help create an environment of price stability for economic growth. However, certain additional measures are needed.

● I shall ask Congress to amend the Employment Act of 1946 to make it clear that Government intends to use all appropriate means to protect the buying power of the dollar.

● I am establishing a continuing Cabinet group on price stability for economic growth to study governmental and private policies affecting costs, prices and economic growth. It will strive also to build a better public understanding of the conditions necessary for maintaining growth and price stability.

● Studies are being undertaken to improve our information on prices, wages and productivity.

I believe all citizens in all walks of life will support this program of action to accelerate economic growth and to promote price stability.

I take up next certain aspects of our international situation and our progress in strengthening it.

America's security can be assured only within a world community of strong, stable, independent nations, in which the concepts of freedom, justice and human freedom can flourish. There can be no such thing as Fortress America. If ever we were reduced to the isolation implied by that term we would occupy a prison, not a fortress. The question whether we can afford to help other nations that want to defend their freedom but cannot fully do so from their own means, has only one answer: We can and we must, as we have been doing so since 1947.

Hoover's Committee on Social Trends

In his State of the Union Message, President Eisenhower announced he would appoint a committee of educators, and representatives of labor, management, finance and the professions to study and establish national economic goals. (See preceding page)

The new committee, the President said, would be similar to former President Herbert Hoover's Committee on Recent Social Trends and would work to "update and supplement...the monumental work" of that committee. Following is a brief account of the Hoover group's activities:

Established in 1929, the Hoover committee was financed by funds from the Rockefeller Foundation and private grants. It issued a report on its findings Jan. 2, 1933, shortly before President Franklin D. Roosevelt took office. As stated in the committee's report, President Hoover's instructions were "to examine and report on recent social trends...with view to providing...a basis for the formulation of large national policies looking to the next phase of the Nation's development."

The committee made studies of methods of attaining greater economic stability and improved housing and education. It analyzed the development of public welfare and social work, insurance, health and the relations of various elements of government as well as the cost of government.

Among its many conclusions, the report predicted that, with immigration restrictions and birth control, the Nation's population growth would slow down to such an extent that the United States "might have a stationary population before the end of the century,...with the total population close to 145 million." Current population estimates are over 175 million.

The committee also concluded that "crime fluctuates with the business cycle," and that "the six-hour day and the five-day week are methods of distributing the loss of jobs in a less inequitable fashion."

Our foreign policy has long been dedicated to building a permanent and just peace. During the past six years our free world security arrangements have been bolstered and the bonds of freedom more closely knit. Our friends in Western Europe are experiencing new internal vitality, and are increasingly more able to resist external threats. Over the years the world has come to understand clearly that it is our firm policy not to countenance aggression. In Lebanon, Taiwan, and Berlin -- our stand has been clear, right, and expressive of the determined will of a united people.

Acting with other free nations we have the solemn obligation to defend the people of free Berlin against any effort to destroy their freedom. In the meantime we shall constantly seek meaningful agreements to settle this and other problems, knowing full well that not only the integrity of a single city, but the hope of all free peoples is at stake.

We need, likewise, to continue helping to build the economic base so essential to the free world's stability and strength. The International Monetary Fund and the World Bank have both fully proven their worth as instruments of international financial cooperation. Their executive directors have recommended an increase in each member's subscription. I am requesting the Congress for immediate approval of our share of these increases.

We are now negotiating with representatives of the 20 Latin-American republics for the creation of an inter-American financial institution. Its purpose would be to join all the American republics in a common institution which would promote and finance development in Latin America. One great result of this would be to make more effective use of capital from the World Bank, the Export-Import Bank and private sources.

Private enterprise continues to make major contributions to economic development in all parts of the world. But we have not yet marshaled the full potential of American business for this task, particularly in countries which have recently attained their independence. I shall present to this Congress a program designed to encourage greater participation by private enterprise in economic development abroad.

DISEASE ERADICATION

Further, all of us know that to advance the cause of freedom we must do much more than help build sound economies. The spiritual, intellectual and physical strength of people throughout the world will in the last analysis determine their willingness and their ability to resist communism. To give a single illustration of our many efforts in these fields: We have been a participant in the effort that has been made over the last few years against one of the great scourges of mankind -- disease. Through the Mutual Security Program, public health officials are being trained by American universities to serve in less developed countries. We are engaged in intensive malaria-eradication projects in many parts of the world. In this work America's major successes in our own country prove the feasibility of success everywhere. By these and other means we shall continue and expand our campaign against the afflictions that now bring needless suffering and death to so many of the world's people. We wish to be a part of a great shared effort toward the triumph of health.

I think most of us would agree America is best described by one word -- freedom. If we hope to strengthen freedom in the world we must be ever mindful of how our own conduct reacts elsewhere. No other nation has ever been so floodlighted by world opinion as the United States is today. Everything we do is carefully scrutinized by other peoples throughout the world. The bad is seen along with the good. Because we are human we err. But as free men we are also responsible for correcting the errors and imperfections of our ways.

Last January I made comprehensive recommendations to the Congress for legislation in the labor-management field. To my disappointment, Congress failed to act. The McClellan Committee disclosures of corruption, racketeering and abuse of trust and power in labor-management affairs have aroused America and amazed other peoples. Those disclosures emphasize the need for improved local law enforcement and the enactment of effective Federal legislation to protect the public interest and to insure the rights and economic freedom of millions of American workers. Half-hearted measures will not do.

I shall recommend prompt enactment of legislation designed:

- To safeguard workers' funds in union treasuries against misuse of any kind whatsoever.
- To protect the rights and freedoms of individual union members, including the basic right to free and secret elections of officers.
- To advance true and responsible collective bargaining.
- To protect the public and innocent third parties from unfair and coercive practices such as boycotting and blackmail picketing.

The workers and the public must have these vital protections.

In other areas of human rights -- freedom from discrimination in voting, in public education, in access to jobs and in other respects -- the world is likewise watching our conduct. The image of America abroad is not improved when school children, through closing of some of our schools and through no fault of their own, are deprived of their opportunity for an education.

The government of a free people has no purpose more noble than to work for the maximum realization of equality of opportunity under the law. That is the concept under which our founding papers were written. This is not the sole responsibility of any one branch of our Government. The judicial arm, which has the ultimate authority for interpreting the Constitution, has held that certain state laws and practices discriminate upon racial grounds and are unconstitutional. Wherever the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States is challenged I shall continue to take every proper action necessary to uphold it.

One of the fundamental concepts of our constitutional system is that it guarantees to every individual, regardless of race, religion, or national origin, the equal protection of the laws. Thus those of us who are privileged to hold public office have a solemn obligation to make meaningful this inspiring objective. We can fulfill that obligation by our leadership in teaching, persuading, demonstrating, and in enforcing the law.

We are now making noticeable progress in the field of civil rights -- we are moving forward toward achievement of equality of opportunity for all people everywhere in the United States. In the interest of the Nation and of each of its citizens, that progress must continue.

Legislative proposals of the Administration in this field will be submitted to the Congress early in the session. All of us, I believe, should help to make clear that the Government is united in the common purpose of giving support to the law and the decisions of the courts.

FREEDOM UNDER LAW

Finally by moving steadily toward the goal of greater freedom under law, for our own people, we shall be the better prepared to work for the cause of freedom under law throughout the world. All peoples are sorely tired of the fear and the destruction and the waste of war. As never before, the world knows the human and material costs of war and seeks to replace force with a genuine rule of law among nations.

It is my purpose to intensify efforts during the coming two years in seeking ways to supplement the procedures of the United Nations and other bodies with similar objectives, to the end that the rule of law may replace the rule of force in the affairs of nations. Measures toward this end will be proposed later, including a re-examination of our own relation to the International Court of Justice.

And lastly, let us remind ourselves that Marxist scripture is not new; this is not the gospel of the future. Its basic objective is dictatorship, old as history. What is new is the shining prospect that man can build a world where all can live in dignity.

We seek victory -- not over any nation or people -- but over the ancient enemies of us all; victory over ignorance, poverty, disease and human degradation wherever they may be found.

We march in the noblest of causes -- human freedom.

If we make ourselves worthy of America's ideals, if we do not forget that our Nation was founded on the premise that all men are creatures of God's making, the world will come to know that it is free men who carry forward the true promise of human progress and dignity.

Thank you very much.

PRESIDENT'S 1960 BUDGET SEEKS BALANCE AT $77 BILLION

President Eisenhower's budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, transmitted to Congress Jan. 19, called for expenditures a bit over $77 billion, together with receipts of $77.1 billion, leaving a surplus of $70 million. He estimated, by contrast, that expenditures in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1959 would total $80.9 billion, against receipts of $68 billion, leaving a deficit of $12.9 billion. (See resume below)

To achieve the slight surplus projected by the President, the budget called for a reduction in expenditures, from fiscal 1959 to fiscal 1960, of $3.841 billion, and an increase in revenues of $9.1 billion. Both developments were predicated on a number of assumptions, described by the President in his budget message as follows:

"Any budget is a financial plan. The budget for the Government is proposed by the President, but it is acted upon by the Congress which has the duty under the Constitution to authorize and appropriate for expenditures. Therefore, responsibility for the Government's finances is a shared one. Achievement of the plan set forth in this budget from here on depends upon Congressional response, popular support and developments in our economy and in the world."

Expenditures Reduced

The net reduction of $3.841 billion projected for expenditures in fiscal 1960 was derived by subtracting increases totaling $1.575 billion from decreases totaling $5.416 billion for the functions listed in the chart on page 648. The major changes proposed were as follows:

Decreases --

- Economic & technical development: $1.553 billion. The principal item was $1.375 billion for the International Monetary Fund, a one-time expenditure which the President Jan. 19 asked Congress to authorize for fiscal 1959. Another $250 million saving was projected for the Export-Import Bank, based on the decision that it should sell enough of its assets to operate without recourse to the Treasury in 1960.
- Stabilization of farm prices and income: $896 million. Two factors were involved -- a saving of $712 million on the now-terminated acreage reserve program, and an estimate that lower crop yields would cut outlays for price support programs by $238 million.
- Aids to housing: $876 million. Housing and Home Finance Agency expenditures were expected to drop $777 million, as anti-recession spending for mortgages dropped.
- Postal service: $643 million. Part of this drop in net budget expenditures would result from the non-recurrence of a lump-sum retroactive pay raise in fiscal 1959. But $350 million of the drop was contingent on the enactment of higher postage rates.
- Military assistance: $462 million.
- Labor & manpower: $402 million. All of this drop would result from termination, on April 1, 1959, of the temporary unemployment benefits program enacted in 1958.

The foregoing reductions totaled $4.832 billion of the $5.416 billion projected for all functions.

Increases --

- Interest: $495 million. An estimated increase in the interest paid on the public debt would cost an additional $500 million in fiscal 1960.
- Promotion of aviation and space flight: $225 million. This included increases of $127 million for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and $94 million for the Federal Aviation Agency, the two new agencies created by Congress in 1958.

[1] Includes amounts for proposed legislation.

• Agricultural conservation: $161 million. Most of this would stem from an estimated increase in the conservation reserve program, as the result of terminating the acreage reserve feature of the soil bank.

• Military defense: $145 million. (See discussion of Defense Department budget below)

• Development of atomic energy: $115 million.

• Promotion of science, research, etc.: $95 million. The largest item was $60 million for the 1960 census.

The foregoing increases totaled $1.236 billion of the $1.575 billion projected for all functions.

Receipts Estimated

An increase in budgetary receipts was forecast from all sources in fiscal 1960, as follows:

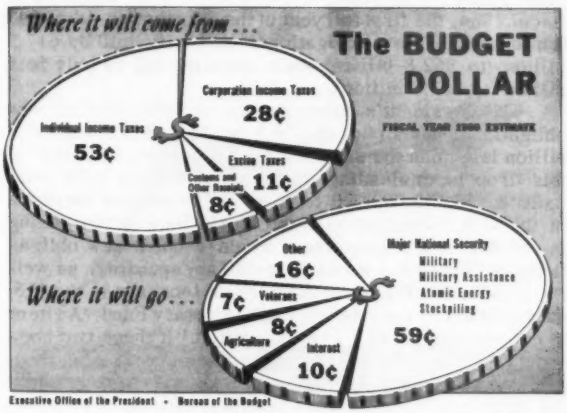
(Fiscal years. In billions)

	1958	1959 est.	1960 est.
Individual income taxes	$34.7	$36.9	$40.7
Corporation income taxes	20.0	17.0	21.5
Excise taxes	8.6	8.5	8.9
All other receipts	5.7	5.6	6.0
TOTAL	$69.1	$68.0	$77.1

Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson stated that, in making these estimates, the Treasury assumed that gross national product, which totaled $437 billion in calendar 1958, would rise to more than $470 billion in calendar 1959. Individual and corporation income tax receipts were derived from the following estimates of income and profits, in billions, by calendar year:

	1958	1959
Personal income	$353.5	$374
Corporate profits	36.5	47

Included in the estimates of fiscal 1960 receipts was $2 billion yielded by higher corporation income and certain excise tax rates scheduled to drop on July 1, 1959. Congress was asked to agree to a sixth one-year postponement of these reductions. The estimates also reflected these proposed changes in current taxes:



• A new formula for taxing the income of life insurance companies, expected to yield an additional $200 million in fiscal 1960.

• Amendments relating to the taxation of cooperatives, and to the rules for computing percentage depletion allowances for mineral products, expected together to yield an additional $50 million in fiscal 1960.

• An increase in the Federal excise tax on aviation fuel from 2 cents a gallon to 4½ cents, together with a new tax of 4½ cents on jet fuel, with total receipts of $85 million to go into the general fund, instead of the Highway Trust Fund as under current law.

• Adjustments in fees and user charges, to yield an additional $15 million.

These were not the only steps required of Congress to balance the budget, however. To cut the postal deficit by the amount proposed by the President, the legislators were put on notice that postage rates would have to be raised, to produce another $350 million. The President also asked Congress to increase the Federal excise tax of 3 cents a gallon on gasoline to 4½ cents, a step expected to yield an additional $690 million in fiscal 1960 and $900 million in fiscal 1961. Since receipts from this tax go into the Highway Trust Fund, the proposed increase would not raise budget receipts, all trust fund transactions being excluded from the budget. Without the increase, however, Congress would have to appropriate money from the general fund to make up the impending deficit in the Highway Trust Fund, with the result that expenditures would exceed those projected in the budget.

Budget Trends

As indicated above, the great bulk of the projected cut of more than $3.8 billion in Federal expenditures could be traced to the non-recurrence in fiscal 1960 of heavy charges in fiscal 1959 for the International Monetary Fund, the acreage reserve program, anti-recession programs for mortgage purchases and for unemployment benefits and retroactive pay raises for Federal civil servants and postal workers, as well as for military personnel. Proposed spending of $77 billion in fiscal 1960 still was $5.1 billion more than was spent in fiscal 1958, and $12.4 billion more than was spent in fiscal 1955, the last year in which Federal spending showed a decrease from the previous year. Of that increase of $12.4 billion over five years, only $5.2 billion occurred in expenditures for major national security purposes.

This more or less steady rise in Federal outlays reflected the even greater rise in new obligational authority, from $57.1 billion in fiscal 1955 to $82.4 billion in fiscal 1959, or an increase of $25.3 billion. New obligational authority -- the authority to obligate the Government to pay for goods and services at some later date -- is granted by Congress in the form of appropriations, contract authorization or authorization to expend from debt receipts. Although Congress has almost no control over the rate of Federal spending as such, it has a great deal to say about total spending in future years, since that is determined in large part by the amount of new obligational authority provided at each session of Congress.

So long as new obligational authority is rising from year to year, spending is certain to rise in its wake. Conversely, when new obligational authority falls, spending must eventually drop too, especially if the former falls below the spending level. That is what happened in fiscal 1954, the first full year of the Eisenhower Administration, when new obligational authority fell by $17.5 billion (to $62.8 billion) while spending fell by only $6.5 billion (to $67.8 billion).

The President's budget for fiscal 1960 called for new obligational authority of $76.8 billion, which was $5.6 billion less than the estimate for fiscal 1959. The size of this drop is misleading, however, since the 1959 total included $3,175,000,000 to cover a 100 percent increase in the U.S. subscription to the World Bank (which, being in the form of a guarantee, would require new obligational authority but would not entail any spending), as well as $1,375,000,000 for a 50 percent increase in the U.S. subscription to the International Monetary Fund. (An item of expenditure as well as an obligation.) If these two nonrecurring items were deducted, the actual decrease, from 1959 to 1960, in new obligational authority requested by the President would be less than $1.1 billion.

The $76.8 billion proposed represented $462 million more than was provided for fiscal 1958 but $224 million less than proposed fiscal 1960 expenditures of $77 billion. Given the course of the budget over the past few years, it was clearly the President's intention to put a halt to the trend toward constantly rising expenditures. Success in this endeavor, he pointed out in his budget message, would pave the way for "tax reduction in the reasonably foreseeable future," since "under our graduated income tax system, with present tax rates, budget receipts should grow even faster than national income."

Defense Spending

The budget estimated expenditures in fiscal 1960 for the military functions of the Defense Department at $40,945,000,000, or $145 million more than in fiscal 1959. This sum was divided among the services as follows:

(Fiscal years. In millions)

	1958	1959	1960
Department of the Army	$9,051	$9,165	$9,264
Department of the Navy	10,906	11,472	11,596

Office of the Secretary	669	1,170	1,410
TOTAL	$39,062	$40,800	$40,945

Expenditures were also estimated in terms of military functions, with a broad division between operating costs and capital costs, as follows:

(Fiscal years. In millions)

	1958	1959	1960
Operating Costs	$21,509	$22,299	$22,319
Military Personnel	11,618	11,908	11,934

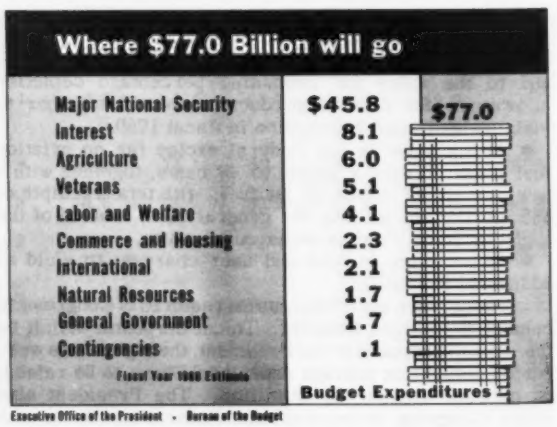
Military Construction	1,755	2,021	1,708



In reviewing progress in the missile field, President Eisenhower said that "sufficient progress has been made on new weapons systems to permit us safely to eliminate marginal systems and to reduce the number of competitive projects." But he pointed to an increase of $800 million in projected spending for the procurement of missile systems and for research and development. The first operational Atlas intercontinental ballistic missiles, he said, would be at launching sites by June 30, 1959, while the first Polaris submarine would go into operation in 1960.

Only a small reduction of 5,000 men in the Air Force was contemplated in fiscal 1960, bringing total active duty military personnel to 2,520,000. The President asked Congress to extend the draft, scheduled to expire June 30, 1959. He also asked for repeal of mandatory minimum strengths for Army reserve components, enacted in 1958, which he said were "wasteful of resources that can be more appropriately applied elsewhere."

Little change in the major forces of the three services was projected in the budget, which provided:

- Army: 14 divisions, five armored cavalry regiments, eight infantry battle groups, three field artillery missile groups 80 air defense antiaircraft battalions, an active aircraft inventory of 5,363 of which 2,558 would be helicopters.
- Navy: 864 active ships, including 389 warships; 16 carrier air groups, 22 carrier antisubmarine squadrons, 42 patrol and warning squadrons, three Marine divisions and three Marine air wings, an active aircraft inventory of 9,200. The 1960 shipbuilding program would provide 18 new ships, including a seventh conventionally powered carrier of the Forrestal class. Construction would begin on the last three of nine Polaris submarines for which funds were already appropriated.
- Air Force: 102 combat wings, including 43 for the Strategic Air Command, 25 for the Air Defense Command, and 34 for the Tactical Air Command; 63 air refueling squadrons, 24 Military Air Transport Service squadrons, and 59 other specialized squadrons, with an active aircraft inventory of 19,982. By June 30, 1959, all of SAC's 11 heavy bomber wings would be converted from 30 B-36's to 45 B-52's per wing. Both the bomber and air defense forces would be entirely jet-equipped by that time.

"On an over-all basis," the budget document stated, "it also provides for a 50 percent increase in funds on the Titan ICBM and a 40 percent increase in funds on the Minuteman ICBM." Congress added $90 million in 1958 for the solid-propellant Minuteman, but the Administration announced that the funds would not be used in fiscal 1959. Defense officials acknowledged, however, that the program had been stepped up by that amount with funds taken from other accounts.

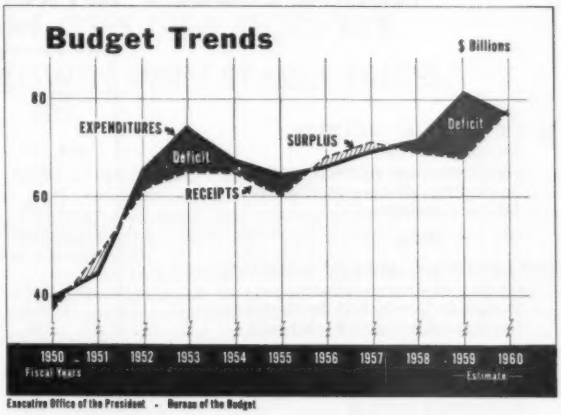
Legislative Proposals

The legislative requests and recommendations set forth by the President in his budget message and in his Economic Report transmitted to Congress on Jan. 20 contained almost no new spending proposals. Many of the requests and recommendations were appearing for the second or third time. Following are the President's major program recommendations, apart from the revenue proposals cited above.

● Foreign Economic Aid: In addition to the increases in the U.S. subscriptions to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, Congress was asked to appropriate an additional $225 million for the Development Loan Fund for the remainder of fiscal 1959, and $700 million for 1960. The President thus ignored the advice of Administration officials who had been urging him to ask for $1 billion a year for five years. He did ask Congress to create an inter-American development bank, however, and said he would propose changes in the eligibility requirements for foreign aid "to help nations that are resisting Soviet domination." Former Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) led a successful fight to knock a similar amendment out of the Mutual Security Act in 1958.

● Aid to Airports: As in 1958, when he vetoed a liberal aid-to-airports bill, the President said the Government "should now begin an orderly withdrawal from the airport grant program," by enacting a diminishing four-year program.



● Merchant Marine: A forthcoming report from the Secretary of Commerce, the President said, would provide a starting point for reappraisal of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, together with the current pattern of construction and operating subsidies. None of the $129 million requested for construction subsidies, he said, would be used for the two passenger superliners which Congress authorized in 1958 to replace the "America" and the "President Hoover."

● Urban Renewal: The President repeated his 1958 request for a six-year program of capital grants totaling $1.35 billion, with a gradual shift in the ratio of Federal-local participation from a 2-for-1 basis to a 1-for-1 basis. The Senate passed a more liberal bill in 1958, which lacked six votes of passing the House.

● Public Housing: By the end of fiscal 1960, the President said, 475,000 units of Federally aided public housing would be occupied, while another 110,000 units already authorized would be awaiting construction. For this reason, no additional authorization was asked.

● Interest Rates: The President again asked Congress to raise or remove statutory ceilings on interest rates on loans guaranteed, insured or made directly by the Veterans Administration, Federal Housing Administration, Rural Electrification Administration, Housing and Home Finance Agency and Maritime Administration. These steps, he said, would "encourage the participation of private capital, and, in the long run, will reduce Government expenditures significantly."

● Area Assistance: Although Congress passed a $280 million area redevelopment bill in 1958, which he vetoed, the President proposed enactment of substantially the same program he recommended in previous years, at a cost of $55 million.

● Agriculture: Pending a special farm message, the President asked Congress to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, which would expire on Dec. 31, 1959, for one year, and to increase by $1.5 billion the authorization to incur losses in the foreign surplus disposal program. He also asked for extension of the Sugar Act.

● Natural Resources: Calling for a "breathing spell in the initiation of new projects," the President announced a "no-new-starts" policy for water resources projects, and a stretchout of projects underway. Authorization of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project in Colorado was again endorsed, but the President asked that no appropriation be made "until the over-all budgetary situation is more favorable."

● Veterans' Benefits: Because "more veterans with disabilities not resulting from their military service are receiving hospital and medical care or pensions," spending for veterans might be expected to continue rising. To counter this trend, the President proposed application of "effective tests of need, both as to income and to net worth." Detailed legislation would be submitted by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs.

● General Government: The President repeated his earlier requests for statehood for Hawaii and home rule for the District of Columbia, for the creation of 46 new Federal judgeships, for extension of the Reorganization Act of 1949 and for changes in immigration law. Since the permanent ceiling on the public debt was scheduled to revert to $283 billion on June 30, 1959, the President again asked that it be raised to $285 billion and that Congress provide a further temporary increase, of unspecified amount, in order to cope with the Treasury's perennial mid-fiscal-year deficit of $6 billion or more.

● Budget Controls: The President reiterated his request in the State of the Union message for authority to veto specific items in appropriation bills. He also asked Congress to "consider ways by which it can more effectively overcome the diffused consideration which results from separate appropriation bills, the provision of new obligational authority outside of the appropriations process, and the separate deliberations on revenue bills and the debt limit."

PRESIDENT'S ECONOMIC REPORT CITES 1958 RECOVERY, STRESSES NEED FOR FURTHER GROWTH WITH STABLE PRICES

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's Jan. 20 letter transmitting the Economic Report to Congress:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
January 20, 1959.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

I present herewith my Economic Report, as required by Section 3(a) of the Employment Act of 1946. In preparing this report, I have had the advice and assistance of the Council of Economic Advisers. I have also had the advice of the heads of executive departments and independent agencies of the Government. I set forth below, largely in the language of the report itself, what I consider to be its salient conclusions and recommendations.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY IN 1958

When the Economic Report was submitted to the Congress in January 1958, a contraction in production and employment that had started some six months earlier was still under way. The decline proved to be sharper than the 1953-54 recession, but it did not last as long. A recovery began in May 1958, and by the end of the year most of the ground lost had been regained. Gross national product, our broadest measure of the Nation's output of goods and services, was at an annual rate of $453 billion in the fourth quarter of the year. In dollars of constant purchasing power, this was almost equal to the highest output attained in the pre-recession period. Nearly a million more people were at work in December 1958 than in July, after allowance for seasonal changes. Although the number of persons unemployed was above four million in December, it was one million below the highest unemployment figure reached during the recession. Wage and salary income and consumer spending were at an all-time high, and the index of consumer prices had been virtually stable for six months, although about 2 percent higher than a year earlier.

ECONOMIC POLICIES IN 1957-58

The events of the last 18 months show again the considerable capacity of our economy to resist contractive influences and to hold a downturn within fairly narrow limits. Many factors contribute to this capacity. Chief among them are the industry and resourcefulness of our people, the strength and resiliency of our free competitive institutions, and the continuing operation in the American economy of powerful forces making for long-term growth.

Also of importance are features of our economic system that moderate the impact of contractive influences on personal income, and thus help to maintain demand. Increasingly, our people work in industries and occupations that are not readily affected by moderate economic declines. And such reductions in income as do result from lower production and employment are offset, to a considerable extent, by supplementary payments, notably by those made under the Federal-state system of unemployment insurance.

Governmental actions also played an important role in moderating the recession and helping to bring about a prompt and sound recovery. Monetary and credit policies were employed vigorously to assure ample supplies of credit. Legislation was enacted to lengthen temporarily the period of entitlement to unemployment benefits. Numerous actions were taken to spur building activity. Steps were taken to accelerate Federal construction projects already under way and to speed up projects supported by Federal financial assistance. Activities under a number of Federal credit programs, in addition to those in the housing field, helped counter the recession. And the acceleration of defense procurement, which was being undertaken in line with national security policy, exerted an expansive effect.

The 1957-58 recession shows that the major emphasis of Federal policies to counteract an economic downturn should be placed on measures that will act promptly to help shift the balance of economic forces from contraction to recovery and growth. Though an effective contribution can be made by the acceleration of public construction projects already underway, little reliance can be placed on large undertakings which, however useful they may be in the longer term, can be put into operation only after an extended interval.

The 1957-58 experience is also a reminder that there is no simple prescription for corrective action which can be applied with only minor variations in every business downturn. It emphasizes the importance, in a situation in which powerful corrective forces are at work, of avoiding hasty and disproportionate actions, such as tax reductions that needlessly endanger the prospects of future fiscal balance and prejudice the orderly revision of the tax structure.

As production, employment and income moved upward in 1958, the economic policies of Government became increasingly concerned with keeping the recovery on a sound basis and promoting a sustainable long-term expansion. Monetary and credit policy was shifted with a view to limiting the expansion of bank credit to a sustainable pace. The large financing operations of the United States Treasury are being conducted with a view to enhancing the basic stability of our financial system and promoting sound economic growth. And the fiscal operations of Government are moving in the direction of restoring a balance between outlays and incomes and thereby countering potential inflationary tendencies.

THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

As 1959 opens, there is reason for confidence that the improvement in business activity which began in the second quarter of last year will be extended into the months ahead. Factors that influence decisions on business capital outlays have become more favorable, and an upturn in these expenditures may already be underway. Residential construction outlays should contribute further to economic expansion, especially if favorable action is taken by the Congress on recommendations made in the report to provide a steadier and more assured flow of private funds into mortgages. Sales of United States products in foreign markets may increase as the pace of business activity abroad quickens and the trade position of primary producing countries is improved. The combined outlays of Federal, state and local government units will continue to rise. Under the impact of these developments, the liquidation of inventories should soon come to an end; indeed, the gap between current sales and stepped-up production schedules may already have been closed. The effect of these favorable factors on employment and income can be expected to enlarge the markets for consumer goods and thereby to reinforce the conditions making for over-all economic expansion.

A PROGRAM FOR ECONOMIC GROWTH WITH STABLE PRICES

Our objective must be to establish a firm foundation for extending economic growth with stable prices into the months and years ahead. This will not come about automatically. To attain our goal, we must safeguard and improve the institutions of our free competitive economy. These are basic to America's unassailable economic strength. We must wage a relentless battle against impediments to the fullest and most effective use of our human and technological resources. We must provide incentives for the enlargement and improvement of the facilities that supplement human effort and make it increasingly productive. Finally, an indispensable condition for achieving vigorous and continuing economic growth is firm confidence that the value of the dollar will be reasonably stable in the years ahead.

Action to meet these challenges is required on many fronts, by all groups in our society and by all units of government.

The individual consumer can play an important part by shopping carefully for price and quality. In this way the American housekeeper can be a powerful force in holding down the cost of living and strengthening the principle that good values and good prices make good business.

Businessmen must redouble their efforts. They must wage a ceaseless war against costs. Production must be on the most economical basis possible. The importance of wide and growing markets must be borne in mind in setting prices. Expanding markets, in themselves, promise economies that help keep costs and prices in check.

Leaders of labor unions have a particularly critical role to play, in view of the great power lodged in their hands. Their economic actions must reflect awareness that the only road to greater material well-being for the Nation lies in the fullest realization of our productivity potential and that stability of prices is an essential condition of sustainable economic growth.

The terms of agreements reached between labor and management in wage and related matters will have a critical bearing on our success in attaining a high level of economic growth with stable prices. It is not the function of government in our society to establish the terms of these contracts, but it must be recognized that the public has a vital interest in them. Increases in money wages and other compensation not justified by the productivity performance of the economy are inevitably inflationary. They impose severe hardships on those whose incomes are not enlarged. They jeopardize the capacity of the economy to create jobs for the expanding labor force. They endanger present jobs by limiting markets at home and impairing our capacity to compete in markets abroad. In short they are, in the end, self-defeating.

Self-discipline and restraint are essential if reasonable stability of prices is to be reached within the framework of the free competitive institutions on which we rely heavily for the improvement of our material welfare. If the desired results cannot be achieved under our arrangements for determining wages and prices, the alternatives are either inflation, which would damage our economy and work hardships on millions of Americans, or controls, which are alien to our traditional way of life and which would be an obstacle to the Nation's economic growth and improvement.

The chief way for Government to discharge its responsibility in helping to achieve economic growth with price stability is through the prudent conduct of its own financial affairs. The budget submitted to the Congress for the fiscal year 1960, which balances expenditures with receipts at a level of $77 billion, seeks to fulfill this responsibility. If Government spending is held within the limits set in the proposed budget, the growth of our economy at the rate that may be expected would make it possible in the reasonably foreseeable future to provide, through a significant further step in tax reform and reduction, added incentives and means for vigorous economic growth and improvement.

Governmental actions in other areas can also help to maintain price stability as our economy expands. The Congress will be requested to amend the Employment Act of 1946 to make reasonable price stability an explicit goal of Federal economic policy, coordinate with the goals of maximum production, employment and purchasing power now specified in that act. Steps will be taken within the Executive Branch to assure that governmental programs and activities are administered in line with the objective of reasonable price stability, and programs for the enlargement and improvement of public information on prices, wages and related costs and productivity will be accelerated.

The many continuing programs of Government that promote the expansion and improvement of our economy will be administered vigorously. Also, new legislation will be requested to strengthen competitive forces, to enhance personal welfare, to promote integrity in labor-management relationships and to foster better industrial relations, to assist local areas experiencing heavy and persistent unemployment, to make more effective use of the large Federal expenditures relating to agricultural price support, to promote conditions favorable to trade amond nations, and to assist in the economic growth and development of the free world.

Favorable consideration of these legislative proposals by the Congress will materially help to achieve the goals of vigorous, orderly and sustainable economic progress within a framework of reasonable price stability.

All our people in view of their broad common interest in promoting the Nation's economic strength, can fully support this program.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR ENACTMENT OF 20-POINT LABOR PROGRAM

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's Jan. 28 message to Congress outlining his requests for labor legislation:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In the State of the Union message on January ninth, I reported again to the Congress on the need for enactment of effective Federal legislation designed:

To safeguard workers' funds in union treasuries against misuse of any kind whatsoever.

To protect the rights and freedoms of individual union members, including the basic right to free and secret election of officers.

To advance true and responsible collective bargaining.

To protect the public and innocent third parties from unfair and coercive practices such as boycotting and blackmail picketing.

There is submitted herewith for the consideration of the Congress a 20-point program which will eliminate abuses demonstrated by the hearings of the McClellan Committee, protect the public interest and insure the rights and economic freedoms of millions of American workers.

Complete and effective labor-management legislation, not a piecemeal program, is essential to assure the American public that true, responsible collective bargaining can be carried on with full protection to the rights and freedoms of workers and with adequate guarantees of the public interest. These recommendations when adopted, should do much to eliminate those abuses and improper practices which, I am firmly convinced, the American public expects and believes will be corrected through legislative action. Equally important, they will do so without imposing arbitrary restrictions or punitive measures on the legitimate activities of honest labor and management officials.

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

I recommend legislation --

1. To require all unions to file detailed annual reports with the Department of Labor and furnish information to their members with respect to their financial operations. These reports would be open to the public, including union members.

2. To require all unions to file with the Department of Labor, as public information, copies of their constitutions and bylaws and information as to their organization and procedures, which would be required to include provisions, which are observed, meeting minimum standards for periodic secret ballot elections of officers, for the removal of officers and for the imposition of supervisory control over the affairs of subordinate bodies.

3. To require all unions to keep proper records on the matters required to be reported, open to examination by Government representatives and to permit union members, subject to reasonable conditions and upon request, to see and examine these records.

4. To require unions, union officers and agents and employers to report and keep proper records with respect to any payments, transactions or investments which create conflicts of interests or have as their objective the interference with the statutory rights of individual union members and employees.

5. To require that union officers hold and administer union funds and property solely for the benefit of the union members and for furthering the purpose of the union and to make this duty enforceable in any court in a suit for an accounting by the union or by members.

6. To require that unions observe minimum standards for the conduct of the elections of officers, including in addition to periodic elections, the right of members to vote in secret without restraint or coercion and upon due notice, uniform opportunity for all members to be candidates, procedures to ensure an accurate tabulation of votes, a ban upon the use of union or employer funds to promote candidacies for union office and requiring constitutions and bylaws to contain detailed statements of election procedures and compliance with such procedures.

7. To require unions to observe minimum standards and to conform to the appropriate provisions of their constitution and bylaws in exercising supervisory control over the affairs of subordinate bodies; such control should be limited in purpose to correcting corruption, or the disregard of democratic procedures or other practices detrimental to the rights of the members in the subordinate body, and assuring the performance of duties as a bargaining representative.

8. To place the administration of this legislation in the Secretary of Labor and to provide him with appropriate and adequate authority to issue regulations, investigate, subpoena witnesses and records, bring court action to compel compliance and to correct violations and institute administrative procedures leading to decisions and orders, which would be subject to judicial review, necessary to effectuate the purposes of the legislation.

9. To prescribe criminal penalties for willful violations of the act, for concealment or destruction of records required to be kept, for bribery between employers and employee representatives, for improper payments by employers or their representatives to employees or employee representatives, for embezzlement of union funds and for false entries or destruction of union books and records.

10. To preserve for union members any present remedies under state or Federal laws, in addition to those provided under this legislation.

11. To amend the secondary boycott provisions of the National Labor Relations Act so as to cover the direct coercion of employers to cease or agree to cease doing business with other persons; union pressures directed against secondary employers not otherwise subject to the act; and inducements of individual employees to refuse to perform services with the object of forcing their employers to stop doing business with others; and to make clear that secondary activity is permitted against an employer performing "farmed-out struck work" and under certain circumstances, against secondary employers engaged in work at a common construction site with the primary employer.

12. To make it illegal for a union, by picketing, to coerce an employer to recognize it as the bargaining representative of his employees or his employees to accept or designate it as their representative where the employer has recognized in accordance with law another labor organization, or where a representation election has been conducted within the last preceding 12 months, or where it cannot be demonstrated that there is a sufficient showing of interest on the part of the employees in being represented by the picketing union or where the picketing has continued for a reasonable period of time without the desires of the employees being determined by a representation election; and to provide speedy and effective enforcement measures.

13. To authorize the National Labor Relations Board to decline to take cases where the effect on commerce is relatively insubstantial and to permit the state courts and agencies to act with respect to these cases.

14. To eliminate the statutory prohibition which presently bars certain strikers from voting in representation elections, although their replacements are permitted to vote, and instead to leave the voting eligibility of strikers, as well as all others, to the administrative discretion of the National Labor Relations Board.

15. To authorize the board, under carefully considered specific conditions, to certify building and construction trades unions as bargaining representatives without an election.

16. In order to speed up the orderly processes of election procedures, to permit the board under proper safeguards to conduct representation elections without holding a prior hearing where no substantial objection to an election is made.

17. To equalize the onus of the non-Communist affidavit by extending it to employers, as well as unions, wishing to use the processes of the act.

18. To make clear that parties to a valid collective bargaining agreement need not negotiate during the life of the agreement unless they have provided for, or agree to, the reopening of the agreement.

19. To authorize the designation by the President of an acting general counsel of the board when vacancies occur in that office.

20. To require that the board be bipartisan in composition by providing that not more than three members of the board may be of the same political party.

I urge that Congress give prompt and favorable consideration to this program. Its enactment, in my opinion, would contribute greatly to the protection of the public interest and the basic rights of individual working men and women.

PRESIDENT'S FARM MESSAGE CALLS FOR PRICE SUPPORT REVISION

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's farm message, which was sent to Congress Jan 29:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

There are produced, in the United States, some 250 farm commodities. The law has required that prices of 12 of these be supported at prescribed minimum levels. It is this requirement, together with the level of required support, that has created our farm surplus problems. Farmers who produce cattle, hogs, poultry, fruits, vegetables, and various other products the prices of which are not supported, -- as well as those who produce crops the prices of which are supported at discretionary levels -- have generally experienced growing markets rather than a build-up of stocks in warehouses.

Three of the 12 mandatory products (wheat, corn and cotton) account for about 85 percent of the Federal inventory of price-supported commodities though they produce only 20 percent of the total cash farm income.

The price-support and production-control program has not worked.

1. Most of the dollars are spent on the production of a relatively few large producers.

Nearly a million and a half farms produce wheat. Ninety percent of the expenditures for price support on wheat result from production of about half of these farms -- the largest ones.

Nearly a million farms produce cotton. Seventy-five percent of the expenditures for cotton price support result from production of about one-fourth of these farms -- the largest ones.

For other supported crops, a similarly disproportionate share of the expenditure goes to the large producers.

For wheat, cotton and rice producers who have allotments of 100 acres or more, the net budgetary expenditures per farm for the present fiscal year are approximately as follows:

wheat	$ 7,000 per farm
cotton	$10,000 per farm
rice	$10,000 per farm

Though some presently unknown share of these expenditures will eventually be recovered through surplus disposal, the final cost of the operation will undoubtedly be impressively large.

Clearly, the existing price support program channels most of the dollars to those who store the surpluses and to relatively few producers of a few crops. It does little to help the farmers in greatest difficulty. For small operators the Rural Development Program approach, which helps develop additional sources of income, has clearly demonstrated that it is a far better alternative.

2. The control program doesn't control.

Mandatory supports are at a level which so stimulates new technology and the flow of capital into production as to offset, in large part, the control effort. Despite acreage allotments and marketing quotas, despite a large soil bank program and despite massive surplus disposal, Government investment in farm commodities will soon be at a new record high. On July 1, 1959, total Government investment in farm commodities will total $9.1 billion. Investment in commodities for which price support is mandatory will total $7.6 billion, of which $7.5 billion will consist of those crops designated by law as basic commodities: wheat, corn, cotton, rice, peanuts and tobacco. And these stocks are increasing rather than diminishing.

We already hold such huge stocks of wheat that if not one bushel of the oncoming crop were harvested we would still have more than enough for domestic use, export sales, foreign donation and needed carry-over for an entire year.

3. The program is excessively expensive.

When the 1958 crops have come into Government ownership, the cost, in terms of storage, interest and other charges, of managing our inventory of supported crops, for which commercial markets do not exist at the support levels, will be running at a staggering rate, in excess of a billion dollars a year. Unless fundamental changes are made, this annual cost will rise. This sum is approximately equal to the record amount being spent in fiscal 1960 by the Federal Government on all water resource projects in the United States including power, flood control, reclamation and improvement of rivers and harbors.

During the present fiscal year, the net budgetary outlay for programs for the stabilization of farm prices and farm income will be $5.4 billion. $4.3 billion of this is for commodities for which price supports are mandatory. While some unpredictable part of this outlay will be recovered in later years through sales for dollars, sales for foreign currency and through barter, the cost will be great, especially when compared with the net income of all farm operators in the United States, which in 1958 was $13 billion. Budgetary expenditures primarily for the support of farm prices and farm income are now equal to about 40 percent of net farm income. Not a bushel of wheat nor a pound of cotton presently is exported without direct cost to the Federal Treasury.

Heavy costs might be justifiable if they were temporary, if they were solving the problems of our farmers, and if they were leading to a better balance of supplies and markets. But unfortunately this is not true.

These difficulties are not to be attributed to any failure on the part of our farm people, who have done an outstanding job of producing efficiently. They have in fact responded to the price incentive as farm people -- and other people -- traditionally have. Our farm families deserve programs that build markets. Instead they have programs that lose markets. This is because the over-all standards for the programs that they have are outdated relationships that existed nearly half a century ago. This was before 60 percent of our present population was born. At that time it took 106 man hours to grow and harvest one-hundred bushels of wheat. In recent years it has taken not 106 but 22. Since then the yield of wheat has doubled. Similar dramatic changes have occurred for other crops. It is small wonder that a program developed many years ago to meet the problems of depression and war is ill-adapted to a time of prosperity, peace and revolutionary changes in production.

The need to reduce the incentives for excess production has been explicit in the three special messages on agriculture which I have previously sent to the Congress. The point has repeatedly been made by the Secretary of Agriculture in his testimony and in his statements to the Congress. The Congress has moved in the right direction but by an insufficient amount. There has been a general tendency to underestimate the pace at which farm technology has been moving forward. Hence there has been a tendency to underestimate the production-inducing effect of the prescribed minimum price support levels.

RECOMMENDATION

I recommend that prices for those commodities subject to mandatory supports be related to a percentage of the average market price during the immediately preceding years. The appropriate percentage of the average market price should be discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture at a level not less than 75 and not more than 90 percent of such average in accordance with the general guidelines set forth in the law. Growers of corn, our most valuable crop, have already chosen, by referendum vote, program changes which include supports based on such an average of market prices.

If, despite the onrush of science in agriculture, resulting in dramatic increases in yields per acre, the Congress still prefers to relate price supports to existing standards, the Secretary should be given discretion to establish the level in accordance with the guidelines now fixed by law for all commodities except those for which supports presently are mandatory.

Either of these changes would be constructive. The effect of either would be to reconcile the farm program with the facts of modern agriculture, to reduce the incentive for unrealistic production, to move in the direction of easing production controls, to permit the growth of commercial markets and to cut the cost of Federal programs.

As we move to realistic farm programs, we must continue our vigorous efforts further to expand markets and find additional outlets for our farm products, both at home and abroad. In these efforts, there is an immediate and direct bearing on the cause of world peace. Food can be a powerful instrument for all the free world in building a durable peace. We and other surplus-producing nations must do our very best to make the fullest constructive use of our abundance of agricultural products to this end. These past four years our special export programs have provided friendly food-deficit nations with four billion dollars worth of farm products that we have in abundance. I am setting steps in motion to explore anew with other surplus-producing nations all practical means of utilizing the various agricultural surpluses of each in the interest of reinforcing peace and the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world -- in short, using food for peace.

Certain details regarding the needed changes in law, particularly with reference to wheat, are appended to this message in the form of a memorandum to me from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Difficulties of the present program should not drive us to programs which would involve us in even greater trouble. I refer to direct payment programs, which could soon make virtually all farm people dependent, for a large share of their income, upon annual appropriatons from the Federal Treasury. I refer also to various multiple price programs, which would tax the American consumer so as to permit sale for feed and export at lower prices.

To assist the Congress in discharging its responsibility, the Administration stands ready, as always, to provide the appropriate committees with studies, factual data and judgments. Continuation of the price support and production control programs in their present form would be intolerable. I urge the Congress to deal promptly with this problem.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

PRESIDENT ASKS FUNDS FOR INTERNATIONAL BANK, MONETARY FUND

President Eisenhower Feb. 12 sent the following message to Congress:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

In the Bretton Woods Agreements Act of 1945 Congress authorized the participation of the United States in the International Monetary Fund and in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

This act of leadership on the part of the Government of the United States made it possible to bring these two great international institutions into being and to launch a major effort among the nations of the free world designed to establish an effective and continuing system of international cooperation in the fields of monetary and exchange policy and economic development.

Since their foundation 12 years ago, the United States has given vigorous support to the bank and the fund. The two institutions have been outstandingly successful.

The bank has assisted on an increasing scale the economic growth of the less developed countries through well-conceived and intelligently executed development projects. The fund, through the provision of wise counsel and timely financial assistance to member countries faced with balance-of-payments difficulties, has successfully promoted the adoption of sound fiscal, monetary and foreign exchange policies in member countries.

The international standing achieved by the bank and fund is such that the international economic system of today cannot successfully function without them. They are indeed vital to the continued economic growth and cohesion of the entire free world.

The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, which is responsible for advising me with respect to United States relationships with the bank and fund, has now recommended that the resources of the bank and fund be increased.

I strongly concur in this recommendation. Accordingly, I ask that Congress, in accordance with the provisions of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, authorize the United States Governor of the International Monetary Fund to request and consent to an increase of 50 percent in the quota of the United States in the International Monetary Fund, and authorize the United States Governor of the International Bank to vote for an increase of 110 percent in the capital stock of the bank, and, subject to said increase becoming effective, subscribe on behalf of the United States to 31,750 additional shares of stock of the bank, amounting to a doubling of the United States subscription.

The recommended increase is necessary to enable the two institutions to continue to operate successfully over the years ahead. Our subscriptions are the only financial support we are required to give these institutions. Within the frame work of their capital structure, they are self-supporting and do not require additional periodic contributions.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The International Monetary Fund has two primary tasks. It promotes international monetary cooperation and sound foreign exchange practices which are vital to the balanced growth of world trade and development. It also provides short-term financial assistance to member countries to help them stabilize their currencies, maintain or move toward convertibility, and overcome temporary balance of payments problems without resorting to restrictions or other practices which may be harmful to international cooperation. In its financial operations, the fund utilizes the gold and currencies which have been provided to it by the member countries on the basis of their quotas. These operations consist of advances or drawings repayable in not more than three to five years.

Since the beginning of its operations, the fund has made available about $4.1 billion to 36 countries. Of this sum $3.2 billion was actually drawn in cash; commitments of over $800 million under standby arrangements or lines of credit are still outstanding; and $100 million in such credits were allowed to expire unused. Approximately two-thirds of the total was provided during the past two years, and the total amount of drawings and unused standby commitments outstanding on Dec. 31, 1958 was $2.6 billion. On that date, the fund's holdings of gold and U.S. dollars available for new advances or commitments were $1.4 billion, compared with $3.5 billion at the end of 1956. In the light of past experience, this amount would not be adequate if calls on the fund comparable to those of recent years were made. The fund must maintain sufficient liquid resources to constitute a second line of reserves to which its members can turn with assurance at any time.

The proposed general increase of 50 percent in the resources of the fund, together with larger increases requested by a few countries, will meet this need. These increases will raise the resources of the fund by approximately $5 billion, of which gold and dollars will amount to some $2.3 billion. If these new resources are made available, the free world can have full confidence in the capacity of the fund to perform its tasks in the coming years.

Under Articles of Agreement of the fund, when a quota is increased, the member must pay 25 percent of the increase in gold, and the balance in its currency. In our case, this means a payment of approximately $344 million in gold and $1,031 million in dollars. The latter will be held in non-interest bearing notes to be utilized only at such time as the fund may need cash to meet drawings by its members.

I should like to stress the cooperative nature of this proposed increase in fund resources. Three-fourths of the gold to be paid to the fund will come from other countries. Morevoer, the additional holdings of other leading currencies will be increasingly useful to the fund, particularly in view of the recent extension of the convertibility of major European currencies. This increase in resources on a very broad base is assured by the provision that the increase will not become effective until members having 75 percent of present fund quotas have consented to quota increases.

INTERNATIONAL BANK

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has, in its 12 years of operations, made loans of over $4 billion in 49 different countries and territories. The bank's reconstruction loans were made in 1947, and since then the bank has made loans of some $3.6 billion for productive development projects. Loans by the bank are currently running at the rate of about $700 million per year. Most of these loans have been made to the underdeveloped areas of the world. The bank's own financing and technical assistance activities have increased the pace of economic growth all over the free world. The bank has also been able to act as a conduit and stimulant to the flow of private capital into less developed areas.

Under the charter of the International Bank, only a small part of its authorized capital is available for lending, and the bank obtains its funds primarily through borrowings in the financial markets of the world. Most of its authorized capital is, in effect, a guarantee for these borrowings. The bank has raised the equivalent of more than $2 billion through issuance of its bonds in several different currencies. Approximately $1.8 billion of such bonds are currently outstanding. These bonds are recognized throughout the world as high quality securities. Both because of the member countries' guarantees and because of the outstanding character of its record, the bank has been able to borrow large sums of money at frequent intervals at rates of interest comparable to those on high-grade Government securities. This permits the bank to fix interest rates on its own loans that do not impose undue burdens on the borrowing countries.

At present, and in the foreseeable future, the ability of the bank to raise funds in the capital market of the United States will depend largely upon the guarantee inherent in this country's subscription. Under the current rate of bank borrowing, the present amount of this guarantee will be exceeded in the next two years. If the bank is to continue to play its full part in raising productivity and living standards, additional capital far beyond the amount covered by the existing United States subscription will be needed.

The proposed increase of 110 percent in the total capital of the bank and of 100 percent in the United States subscription will permit the bank to meet its needs for borrowed funds for a substantial period of time. No part of the increase in our subscription would be required to be paid in except to meet defaults on the bank's obligations. There is no reason to believe that this contingent liability will become a real one.

As in the case of the fund, the proposed increase in the capital of the bank will not become effective until subscriptions have been received for approximately 75 percent of the existing capital. This will assure a wide participation by the member countries.

The Special Report of the National Advisory Council, which describes in detail the proposal to increase the resources of the bank and fund, is attached.

The entire free world needs sound currencies and orderly exchange systems to foster trade and economic growth and it needs capital which will support rising living standards and accelerate the pace of economic development in all of the member countries. The International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have achieved outstanding records as effective instruments toward these ends. For the well-being of the free world and in our own interest, it is essential that the proposed increases in the resources of these two institutions take place.

There is real urgency for prompt action. The United States has for many months been taking the lead in this important effort to equip the bank and fund to continue their work. The countries of the free world look to the United States, because of our economic strength, to set the pace by acting without delay to take up our subscription in the new stock of the bank and to pay our quota increase in the fund. I consider it to be most important for the United States Government to maintain the posture of leadership which it now occupies. To this end, I urge the Congress to enact the necessary legislation so that these increases may promptly be made effective, to ensure further progress toward realizing a better life for the peoples of the free world.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's May 11 message to Congress transmitting an agreement for a proposed Inter-American Development Bank:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

I herewith submit to the Congress the Agreement for the establishment of the Inter-American Development Bank together with a Special Report of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems recommending United States participation as a member of such bank. Representatives of the United States took an active part in the inter-American meetings which formulated the agreement. I urge that the Congress enact legislation authorizing the President to accept membership in the bank for the United States and to assume the subscription obligations prescribed in the agreement.

The establishment of the Inter-American Development Bank and our participation in it will be a most significant step in the history of our economic relations with our Latin American neighbors. It will fulfill a long-standing desire on the part of the Latin American republics to have an Inter-American institution specifically designed to promote the financing of accelerated economic development in Latin America. At the Buenos Aires Economic Conference in August and September of 1957, the United States supported a resolution calling for a study of possible solutions for the problems of financing economic development. In August of 1958 the United States indicated that it would be prepared to consider the establishment of a development institution for Latin America and in September of that year an informal meeting in Washington of the Foreign Ministers of the American republics recommended that a specialized committee of governmental representatives negotiate and draft an instrument for the organization of such a development institution. A Specialized Committee, thereafter established by a resolution of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, was convened at the Pan American Union in Washington on January 8, 1959, and devoted three months of continuous effort to the preparation of the agreement which I now lay before the Congress for its approval.

The proposed institution is well designed to serve the needs of the Latin American republics on a sound financial basis. The bulk of its assets, $850 million, which are subscribed for the capital stock of the bank, are to be used to make or facilitate loans on banking terms, repayable in the currency in which the loan has been made. Each member republic is called upon to make a significant subscription to the capital of the bank. Of the $850 million in authorized capital stock, $400 million is for paid-in shares to be paid for in installments over a period of approximately three years. Half of each installment is payable in gold or dollars, and half in the national currency of the members. The United States subscription to the paid-in capital is $150 million. The Latin American subscriptions for such capital total $250 million.

The balance, $450 million of callable capital, will constitute a guarantee of borrowings by the bank in capital markets and would only be actually expended if the bank were unable to meet its commitments. It is planned that the bank will rely heavily on raising funds from private sources for the financing of sound economic development projects in Latin America. The United States portion of the callable capital is $200 million.

It should be noted that the agreement expresses the intention of increasing the capitalization of the bank by an additional $500 million after September 30, 1962, if the increase is approved by a three-fourths vote in the board of governors. The increase would be in the form of callable capital and the United States share would be approximately $200 million. This arrangement was included in recognition of a deep conviction on the part of the Latin American representatives that definite provision should be made in the agreement for an increase in the capital of the bank at an early date. The United States representatives agreed that such an increase would be desirable but believed that it would be wise to have an initial period of experience with the bank's operations before the additional capital was subscribed. Accordingly, if the bank's operations are established on an effective basis in accordance with expectations, the United States will in good faith be committed to vote for the increase and subscribe to its share of the increased capital.

The agreement also establishes a Fund for Special Operations to be financed by specified contributions by all of the member countries, half in gold and dollars and half in the national currencies of the members. Its initial resources will be $150 million. The United States contribution of $100 million is payable in installments, the first of which will be $50 million. The fund is established for the making of loans on terms and conditions appropriate for dealing with special circumstances arising in specific countries or with respect to specific projects, where normal terms of lending would not be appropriate. Loans by the fund may be made repayable in whole or in part in the currency of the borrowing country. The agreement carefully segregates the resources of the fund from the capital resources of the bank so as not to jeopardize, in any way, the financial soundness of the institution and its ability to raise funds in the capital markets.

It is proposed that the funds necessary to meet the initial portion of the United States subscription to the bank be provided by a no-year appropriation, to be expended at such time after its enactment as may be desirable taking into account the active role which the United States has played in formulating the proposal for the bank.

The charter authorizes the bank to provide its members, and private entities in the territories of the members, with needed technical assistance. Particular attention is given to technical assistance in the fields of preparation, financing and execution of development plans and projects, and the training of personnel specializing in the formulation and implementation of development plans and projects. These are two areas where there has long been a need for additional assistance and the facilities which will be provided by the bank should be very helpful to member countries in utilizing their international borrowing capacity for the development projects most essential to their economies.

The representatives of the Latin American countries, as well as those of the United States, have demonstrated an awareness of the necessity of making adequate provision for safeguarding the resources of the institution in order that its future existence as an important factor in the development of the hemisphere may be assured. In this respect the agreement follows, in many aspects, the charter of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It is anticipated that the new bank will work closely with existing sources of public credit, including the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Export-Import Bank, and the Development Loan Fund.

The Special Report of the National Advisory Council, submitted herewith, describes the agreement creating the bank in greater detail.

* * * * *

I am strongly of the opinion that because of the following general policy considerations the United States should support the creation of this bank for Latin America:

(1) The special relationship, historical, political and economic, between the United States and the Latin American republics;

(2) The pressing economic and social problems in the area resulting from a rapid rate of increase in population and widespread desire for improved living conditions; and

(3) The desirability of an institution which will specialize in the needs of Latin America, which will be supported in large part by Latin American resources and which will give the Latin American members a major responsibility in determining priorities and authorizing loans.

I urge the Congress to enact promptly legislation enabling the United States to join with the other members of the Organization of American States in establishing the Inter-American Development Bank which will foster, in a sound and efficient manner, more rapid advance by the people of the nations south of our border as they strive to improve their material well-being.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

PRESIDENT ASKS $3.9 BILLION FOR MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM, CAUTIONS AGAINST 'RECKLESS CUTS' IN FACE OF RED POWER

Following is the complete text of President Eisenhower's March 13 message to Congress requesting fiscal 1960 funds for the Mutual Security Program:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

A year ago in concluding my message to the Congress on the Mutual Security Program I described it as of transcendent importance to the security of the United States. I said that our expenditures for mutual security are fully as important to our national defense as expenditures for our own forces. I stated my conviction that for the safety of our families, the future of our children and our continued existence as a nation, we cannot afford to slacken our support of the Mutual Security Program.

The events of the intervening year have vividly demonstrated the truth of these statements. In this one year there have been crises of serious proportions in the Middle East, in the Far East and in Europe. In each of these the strength built by our Mutual Security Program has been of immeasurable value. At the time of the difficulty in Lebanon the uneasy balance of the Middle East would have been far more seriously endangered if it had not been for the stability of other Middle Eastern countries which our Mutual Security Program had helped build. Without our mutual security aid, Jordan, under severe pressures, would have faced collapse, with the danger of flaring conflict over her territory.

In the Far East, the firm stand of the Republic of China against the Communist attack on Quemoy would not have been possible without the arms and training furnished by our Mutual Security Program and by the high morale promoted by the economic progress we have helped forward on Taiwan. This successful local defense blunted an aggression which otherwise could have precipitated a major conflict.

In Europe today the Soviet Union has made demands regarding the future of Berlin which, if unmodified, could have perilous consequences. The resoluteness with which we and our allies will meet this issue has come about in large measure because our past programs of economic and military assistance to our NATO allies have aided them in strengthening the economies and the military power needed to stand firm in the face of threats. While our Mutual Security Program has demonstrated a high value in these tense moments, its military and economic assistance to other areas has undoubtedly had an equal value in maintaining order and progress so that crises have not arisen.

REALITIES OF 1959 AND AHEAD

I believe that these events of the past year and the stern, indeed harsh realities of the world of today and the years ahead demonstrate the importance of the Mutual Security Program to the security of the United States. I think four such realities stand out.

● First, the United States and the entire free world are confronted by the military might of the Soviet Union, Communist China and their satellites. These nations of the Communist bloc now maintain well-equipped standing armies totaling more than 6,500,000 men formed in some 400 divisions. They are deployed along the borders of our allies and friends from the northern shores of Europe to the Mediterranean Sea, around through the Middle East and Far East to Korea. These forces are backed by an air fleet of 25,000 planes in operational units, and many more not in such units. They, in turn, are supported by nuclear weapons and missiles. On the seas around this land mass is a large navy with several hundred submarines.

● Second, the world is in a great epoch of seething change. Within little more than a decade a world-wide political revolution has swept whole nations -- 21 of them -- with three-quarters of a billion people, a fourth of the world's population, from colonial status to independence -- and others are pressing just behind. The industrial revolution, with its sharp rise in living standards, was accompanied by much turmoil in the Western world. A similar movement is now beginning to sweep Africa, Asia and South America. A newer and even more striking revolution in medicine, nutrition and sanitation is increasing the energies and lengthening the lives of people in the most remote areas. As a result of lowered infant mortality, longer lives and the accelerating conquest of famine, there is underway a population explosion so incredibly great that in little more than another generation the population of the world is expected to double. Asia alone is expected to have one billion more people than the entire world has today. Throughout vast areas there is a surging social upheaval in which, overnight, the responsibilities of self-government are being undertaken by hundreds of millions, women are assuming new places in public life, old family patterns are being destroyed and new ones uneasily established. In the early years of independence, the people of the new nations are fired with a zealous nationalism which, unless channelled toward productive purposes, could lead to harmful developments. Transcending all this there is the accompanying universal determination to achieve a better life.

● Third, there is loose in the world a fanatic conspiracy, international communism, whose leaders have in two score years seized control of all or parts of 17 countries, with nearly one billion people, over a third of the total population of the earth. The center of this conspiracy, Soviet Russia, has by the grimmest determination and harshest of means raised itself to be the second military and economic power in the world today. Its leaders never lose the opportunity to declare their determination to become the first with all possible speed. The other great Communist power, Red China, is now in the early stages of its social and economic revolution. Its leaders are showing the same ruthless drive for power and to this end are striving for ever increasing economic output. They seem not to care that the results -- which thus far have been considerable in materialistic terms -- are built upon the crushed spirits and the broken bodies of their people.

The fact that the Soviet Union has just come through a great revolutionary process to a position of enormous power and that the world's most populous nation, China, is in the course of tremendous change at the very time when so large a part of the free world is in the flux of revolutionary movements, provides communism with what it sees as its golden opportunity. By the same token freedom is faced with difficulties of unprecedented scope and severity -- and opportunity as well.

Communism exploits the opportunity to intensify world unrest by every possible means. At the same time communism masquerades as the pattern of progress, as the path to economic quality, as the way to freedom from what it calls "Western imperialism," as the wave of the future. For the free world there is the challenge to convince a billion people in the less developed areas that there is a way of life by which they can have bread and the ballot, a better livelihood and the right to choose the means of their livelihood, social change and social justice -- in short, progress and liberty. The dignity of man is at stake. Communism is determined to win this contest -- freedom must be just as dedicated or the struggle could finally go against us. Though no shot would have been fired, freedom and democracy would have lost. This battle is now joined. The next decade will forecast its outcome.

● The fourth reality is that the military position and economic prosperity of the United States are interdependent with those of the rest of the free world. As I shall outline more fully below, our military strategy is part of a common defense effort involving many nations. The defense of the free world is strengthened and progress toward a more stable peace are advanced by the fact that powerful free world forces are established on territory adjoining the areas of Communist power. The deterrent power of our air and naval forces and our intermediate range missiles is materially increased by the availability of bases in friendly countries abroad. Moreover, the military strength of our country and the needs of our industry cannot be supplied from our own resources. Such basic necessities as iron ore, bauxite for aluminum, manganese, natural rubber, tin and many other materials acutely important to our military and industrial strength are either not produced in our own country or are not produced in sufficient quantities to meet our needs. This is an additional reason why we must help to remain free the nations which supply these resources.

* * * * *

The challenge that confronts us is broad and deep -- and will remain so for some time. Yet our gravest danger is not in these external facts but within ourselves -- the possibility that in complacent satisfaction with our present wealth, preoccupation with increasing our own military power we may fail to recognize the realities around us and to deal with them with the vigor and tenacity their gravity requires. We have the national capacity and the national program to surmount these dangers and many more. We have the strength of our free institutions, the productivity of our free economy, the power of our military forces, a foreign policy dedicated to freedom and respect for the right of others and the collective strength of our world-wide system of alliances.

The effectiveness of all these in meeting the challenge confronting us is multiplied by our Mutual Security Program -- a powerful and indispensable tool in dealing with the realities of the second half of the twentieth century. I should like to outline how the principal elements of this program will serve the vital interests of our country in Fiscal Year 1960.

THE MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM FOR FISCAL YEAR 1960

The Mutual Security Program which I propose for Fiscal Year 1960 is in the same pattern and has the same component parts as the program which the Congress enacted at the last session. To carry forward this program I ask $3,929,995,000.

I ask these funds to attain the two basic objectives of the Mutual Security Program: military security and economic and political stability and progress.

THE MILITARY SHIELD

In view of the maintenance by the Communists of armed force far beyond necessary levels and the repeated evidences of willingness to use a portion of that force where the Communist leaders believe it would be a successful means to a Communist end, it is rudimentary good sense for the peoples of the free nations to create and maintain deterrent military strength. We do this not through choice but necessity. It is not in our nature to wish to spend our substance on weapons. We would like to see these outlays shifted to the economic benefit of our own Nation and our friends abroad striving for economic progress.

Because the need for military strength continues, we seek to build this strength where it can most effectively be developed, deploy it where it can most effectively be used and share the burden of its cost on as fair a basis as possible. To this end, we and over 40 other nations have joined together in a series of security pacts. Some of our allies and close friends have joined in other supporting agreements. We have also made certain individual undertakings such as the Middle East Resolution. Each of the free nations joined in this world-wide system of collective security contributes to the common defense in two ways: through the creation and maintenance of its individual forces; through the support of the collective effort.

For our own military forces, which form a major element in the total security pattern, I have asked the Congress to make available $40.85 billion, to which must be added approximately $2.8 billion for atomic programs, largely for defense purposes. For our contribution of military materiel and training assistance to the collective security effort, I now ask the Congress to make available $1.6 billion. This amount is far below that needed for our share of the cost of improving, or even providing essential maintenance for the forces of our allies. It is a minimum figure necessary to prevent serious deterioration of our collective defense system.

These two requests, one for our own defense forces, the other for our share in supporting the collective system, are but two elements in a single defense effort. Each is essential in the plans of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for our national security. Each is recommended to you by the same Joint Chiefs, the same Secretary of Defense and the same Commander in Chief.

Dollar for dollar, our expenditures for the Mutual Security Program, after we have once achieved a reasonable military posture for ourselves, will buy more security than far greater additional expenditures for our own forces. Two fundamental purposes of our collective defense effort are to prevent general war and to deter Communist local aggression. We know the enormous and growing Communist potential to launch a war of nuclear destruction and their willingness to use this power as a threat to the free world. We know also that even local aggressions, unless checked, could absorb nation after nation into the Communist orbit -- or could flame into world war.

The protection of the free world against the threat or the reality of Soviet nuclear aggression or local attack rests on the common defense effort established under our collective security agreements. The protective power of our Strategic Air Command and our naval air units is assured even greater strength not only by the availability of bases abroad but also by the early warning facilities, the defensive installations and the logistic support installations maintained on the soil of these and other allies and friends for our common protection. The strategy of general defense is made stronger and of local defense is made possible by the powerful defensive forces which our allies in Europe, in the Middle East and the Far East have raised and maintain on the soil of their homelands, on the borders of the Communist world. These military forces, these essential bases and facilities constitute invaluable contributions of our partners to our common defense. On our part we contribute through our military assistance program certain basic military equipment and advanced weapons they need to make their own military effort fully effective but which they cannot produce or afford to purchase.

As we move into the age of missile weapons, this plan of collective security will grow in importance. Already intermediate range ballistic missiles are being deployed abroad. Our friends on whose territory these weapons are located must have the continued assurance of our help to their own forces and defense in order that they may continue to have the confidence and high morale essential to vigorous participation in the common defense effort. The funds I now ask for military assistance are to supply to these partners in defense essential conventional weapons and ammunition for their forces and the highly complex electronic equipment, missiles and other advanced weapons needed to make their role in the common defense effective. As already pointed out these funds are asked on a minimal basis. Continuation of a sufficient flow of materials and of sufficient training for the year can be attained only by some additional cannibalizing of the pipeline, already reduced to a point where flexibility is difficult.

To summarize, through the Mutual Security Program our friends among the free world nations make available to us for the use of our forces some 250 bases in the most strategic locations, many of them of vital importance. They support ground forces totaling more than five million men stationed at points where danger of local aggression is most acute, based on their own soil and prepared to defend their own homes. They man air forces of about 30,000 aircraft of which nearly 14,000 are jets, 23 times the jet strength of 1950 when the program started. They also have naval forces totaling 2,500 combat vessels with some 1,700 in active fleets or their supporting activities.

Over the years of our combined effort, these allies and friends have spent on these forces some $141 billion, more than 6 times the $22 billion we have contributed in military assistance. During calendar year 1958 they contributed $19 billion of their own funds to the support of these forces. On our part we have created and maintain powerful mobile forces which can be concentrated in support of allied forces in the most distant parts of the world. We know it would be impossible for us to raise and maintain forces of equal strength and with the immeasurable value of strategic location. Without the strength of our allies our Nation would be turned into an armed camp and our people subjected to a heavy draft and an annual cost of many billions of dollars above our present military budget.

Because the military assistance program is a vital part of our total defense, and to be certain that it serves its intended purpose fully and effectively, I have appointed a bipartisan committee of prominent Americans of the highest competence to examine this program and its operation thoroughly. I have asked them to make a report of their findings on the program, including its proper balance with economic assistance. Since its formation in late November of last year, the committee has been vigorously pursuing its study, including personal visits to all major areas where military assistance is being rendered. The committee has already indicated to me that it will recommend an increase in the level of commitments for vital elements of the military assistance program, primarily for the provision of weapons to the NATO area. I expect to receive its written interim report shortly. I will, of course, give this report my most careful attention and will then make such further recommendations as are appropriate.

MAINTAINING ECONOMIC STABILITY

While our own and our allies' military efforts provide a shield for freedom, the economic phases of our Mutual Security Program provide the means for strengthening the stability and cohesion of free nations, limiting opportunities for Communist subversion and penetration, supporting economic growth and free political institutions in the newly independent countries, stimulating trade and assuring our own Nation and our allies of continuing access to essential resources. Two of these programs, Defense Support and Special Assistance, are specifically directed towards helping maintain order, stability and, in certain countries, economic progress, where these are of material importance to the welfare of the United States itself.

Defense Support: For most of our allies and friends the cost of the share which they bear of the common defense effort constitutes a heavy burden on their economies. Our NATO allies in Western Europe bear this entire economic burden themselves, receiving from us only advanced weapons and other essential items of military equipment and certain training. But for others, the burden of defense vastly exceeds their limited resources. They therefore are forced to turn to us for economic help in maintaining political and economic stability.

We supply this assistance through our defense support program to 12 nations in which we are helping to arm large military forces. Eleven of these nations -- Greece, Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Viet-Nam, the Philippines, the Republics of China and Korea -- lie along or are narrowly separated from the very boundaries of the Sino-Soviet Bloc, subjected daily to the pressures of its enormous power. Several of them are also the sites of major U.S. military installations. The twelfth, Spain, is the strategically located site of other bases used by the United States. Together these 12 nations are supporting three million armed forces -- nearly one-half of the total forces of the free world. Despite their proximity to Communist forces, most of these nations have pledged themselves to the world-wide collective defense plan. Greece and Turkey are among our NATO allies. Pakistan, Thailand and the Philippines are among our SEATO allies and Cambodia, Laos and Viet-Nam are protected through SEATO. Turkey, Iran and Pakistan are active members of the Baghdad Pact which forms a connecting link of free world defenses between NATO and SEATO. Korea, the Republic of China, and the Philippines are joined with us in special mutual defense agreements.

For defense support, to make possible the needed contributions of these 12 nations to the common defense, I ask $835 million. I ask the Congress to recognize these economic needs of our partners and to provide the full amount I request. Over two-thirds of this sum will be used for Turkey, Viet-Nam, Taiwan and Korea. These courageous and strategically located nations -- three of them the free areas of divided nations -- are directly faced by heavy concentrations of Communist military power. Together they contribute nearly two million armed forces in the very front lines of the free world's defenses. These nations depend for survival on our defense support program. The remaining third of the funds will be for the eight other nations which rely on this help to enable them to make their valuable contributions to the common defense without serious harm to their economies. These nations are contributing heavily to the defense effort in keeping with their abilities. Reducing the defense support we provide them will compel a reduction in the forces we wish them to maintain in our common defense or place a heavy additional burden on the already low standards of living of their people.

Special Assistance. There are a number of other nations and areas of the world whose need is so great and whose freedom and stability are so important to us that special assistance to them is essential. In North Africa, for example, the newly independent Arab nation, Tunisia, is struggling to improve the economic and social conditions of its people while under strong external pressures. Its neighbors, Morocco and Libya, are also striving to build economic progress upon their newly acquired political independence. Another new nation, the Sudan, is an important link between the Arab world and rapidly growing Central Africa and is intently working to maintain its independent course of progress in the face of strong Communist and other outside pressures. These nations are all new outposts of freedom in whose success we are deeply interested.

During the last year, as I have mentioned, Jordan has been subjected to severe pressures. Should Jordan be overwhelmed, the peace and stability of the Middle East would be endangered. But with its very limited internal resources, Jordan desperately needs continued substantial outside help. West Berlin is a solitary outpost of freedom back of the Iron Curtain. In addition to the firm support which we and our NATO allies have assured West Berlin in the face of current Soviet threats, it is important that we show our support of its people by continuing our economic assistance to the beleaguered city.

Programs for Health: I have on several occasions during the recent past sought to focus public attention on the great opportunity open to the United States in the field of health. The United States will continue to support and promote the accelerating international fight against disease in the coming fiscal year. The great campaign to eradicate the world's foremost scourge, malaria, is moving into its peak period of activity and need for special assistance funds. Of more than a billion people formerly exposed to the disease, half have now been protected and the movement is gaining strength and momentum as a true international effort. The substantial progress of this campaign as well as modern medical potential generally have opened new vistas of the conquest of mass disease through pooling of efforts.

I ask the Congress to make available funds to continue the program for development of medical research programs begun last year by the World Health Organization with the help of a grant from the United States. I also propose that the United States explore whether practical and feasible means can be found whereby progress can be made toward equipping those nations whose needs are greatest to provide in a reasonable time pure drinking water for their people as a method of attack on widespread water-borne diseases.

Added to the health programs now being carried on by our bilateral programs and through our voluntary contributions to the United Nations, these new programs will raise the health activities proposed for Fiscal Year 1960 under the Mutual Security Program to a total value of some $84 million, exclusive of loans by the Development Loan Fund in this field. The total effort of the United States in the field of international health, including among other activities those conducted by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, will approximate 100 million dollars.

* * * * *

For the nations I have mentioned and several others, for West Berlin, for such programs as those for health, for support to certain of our American-sponsored schools abroad and for our contribution to the United Nations Emergency Force I ask $272 million in Special Assistance funds. I believe that the close examination which I expect the Congress to give each of these special needs will show that this request is conservative.

AIDING ECONOMIC PROGRESS

The requests for funds for defense support and special assistance which I have outlined thus far are directed primarily at maintaining political and economic stability. But in our dynamic world of multiple revolutions this is far from enough. In many nations of Asia and Africa per capita incomes average less than $100 a year. Life expectancies are half those of the more advanced nations. Literacy averages 25 percent. Affected by the revolutionary drives which are sweeping their regions, the peoples of the areas will tolerate these conditions no longer -- and they should not. They are intently determined to progress -- and they deserve to do so. If they cannot move forward, there will be retrogression and chaos, the injurious effects of which will reach our own shores. These newly independent peoples look to their present generally moderate governments for leadership to progress. If they do not find it, they will seek other leadership, possibly extremists whose advent to power would not only endanger the liberties of their own people but could adversely affect others, including ourselves. Above all, these people must have hope that they can achieve their economic goals in freedom, with free institutions and through a working partnership with other citizens of the free world.

The leaders of the Soviet Union and Communist China are intently aware of the great revolutionary surges in these less developed areas, many of which are on the borders of the Communist bloc. Seeing in these new trends an historic opportunity, they have reversed their attitude of hostility to all nations not under their direct control. Five years ago they entered on a great diplomatic and economic campaign of wooing the new nations of Asia and Africa, even attempting to push their drive into Latin America. I reported on this campaign of trade and aid in my message to the Congress last year. It has increased in intensity in the intervening time. Communist bloc military and economic credits to 17 selected nations exceeded a billion dollars in 1958 alone, bringing the present total to $2.4 billion. The number of technicians supplied to 17 countries of Asia and Africa rose from 1,600 in 1957 to 2,800 in 1958.

Our own programs of technical cooperation and capital assistance are not mere responses to Communist initiatives. The reverse is true. This year will mark the tenth anniversary of our Point Four program. Capital assistance for development has been flowing to nations needing our help for many years. Even if the Communist bloc should revert tomorrow to its previous icy treatment of all free peoples, we would continue the warmth of our interest in and help to their determined efforts to progress. Nevertheless, it is imperative that we understand the real menace of the Communist economic offensive. The great contest in half the globe, the struggle of a third of the world's people, is to prove that man can raise his standard of living and still remain free -- master of his individual destiny and free to choose those who lead his government. The Communist economic offensive presents the grave danger that a free nation might develop a dependence on the Communist bloc from which it could not extricate itself. This must not happen. We and other nations of the free world must provide assurance that no nation will be compelled to choose between bread and freedom.

The United States is determined to do its part in providing this assurance. For this purpose, in addition to channels of private investment and existing financing institutions, we have created two carefully designed instruments of national policy: the technical cooperation program and the Development Loan Fund.

Technical Cooperation: To carry on our technical cooperation program some 6,000 skilled American men and women are now working in 49 countries and nine dependent territories which have asked our help. They are advising high officials on problems of administering new governments. They are helping farmers raise their incomes by teaching them better methods of cultivation, irrigation and fertilization and by introducing more productive seeds, poultry and livestock. They are planning with local scientists for uses of atomic power and isotopes. They are attacking disfiguring and debilitating diseases and helping to increase the health and vigor of untold millions. They are helping to organize the educational systems which will bring literacy and the knowledge which is the power for progress. In order to transfer our modern technical knowledge even more effectively, we will bring next year over 10,000 of the rising leaders of the less developed areas to study in the United States or in specially developed training programs in other countries.

To provide for the work of our technicians abroad and for these training programs I ask $179.5 million for fiscal year 1960. The increase in this sum over the current year is to expand programs recently begun in the newly independent and emerging countries of Arica, to intensify activity in Asian nations and to augment substantially cooperative programs with countries of Latin America.

I also ask $30 million to be available for our contribution to the companion technical cooperation and special projects programs of the United Nations, initiated by our own Government. I anticipate that increasing contributions by other members in the year 1960 will call for this increased contribution on our part.

As in recent years, I believe we should continue our annual contribution of $1.5 million to the technical cooperation program of the Organization of American States.

The Development Loan Fund: Administrative and technical skills, though essential to economic growth, cannot of themselves make possible the rate of progress demanded of their governments by the peoples of the newly independent nations. For this progress they must have capital -- capital for the roads, telecommunications, harbors, irrigation and electric power which are the substructure of economic progress and for the steel mills, fertilizer plants and other industries which are fundamental to general economic growth. Just as in the early decades of our national development we depended upon the more highly developed nations of that period -- England, France and others -- for capital essential to our growth, so do the new nations of this era depend on us and others whose economies are well established.

Two years ago the Congress, the Executive Branch, and several distinguished private organizations reexamined the needs of the newly independent nations for outside development capital and of the then existing sources. The independent but unanimous conclusion of these studies was that existing sources were and for the foreseeable future would be inadequate to meet even the most pressing needs. They recommended that there be established a new institution to provide long-term credits on flexible terms. In the light of these findings, I recommended to the Congress and it established the Development Loan Fund, an agency of the United States Government especially designed to advance loans on a businesslike basis for sound projects which cannot find financing from private or established governmental sources.

The Development Loan Fund in its little more than a year of active operation has established the sound and useful position that was foreseen for it. In this short time it has taken under consideration $2.8 billion in screened requests for loans. It has later determined that some $600 million were unacceptable or more appropriate for private or other public financing. Of its total capital of $700 million thus far made available by the Congress, it had by mid-February 1959 committed $684 million for loans to projects in 35 countries. For all practical purposes it is now out of funds for further loan commitments and has before it applications totaling over $1.5 billion with more being received almost daily.

In order that the fund may continue to meet the most urgent needs of the nations depending on us, I have asked the Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $225 million to be available in the fiscal year 1959. This appropriation is under authorizations previously made but not used.

When I made my original recommendation to the Congress in 1957 for the establishment of the Development Loan Fund I urged that it be provided with capital for three years of operation and stated that based on observation of its progress within that period I would ask for longer-term capitalization commencing in fiscal year 1961. The Congress chose to authorize capital initially for two years of operation. I now ask that the Congress authorize and appropriate $700 million to become available in FY 1960, the third year of the fund. This sum will allow the fund a level of activity no higher than it established in its first year of operation. Consideration should continue to be given to capitalization procedures that will allow better long range planning.

Private Investment: These governmental programs of technical cooperation and capital financing of course only augment the investment in progress which comes from private sources. But they are indispensable and probably will be for a number of years because private investment, though very significant in the Western Hemisphere, does not and cannot in the near future be expected to supply more than a fraction of the capital needed by the new nations of Asia and Africa. In order to encourage increased private investment in these areas, our Government has already undertaken a system of guaranties against loss from non-convertibility of foreign currency receipts and from expropriation, confiscation, and war. To further stimulate such investment, I now request that legislation be enacted to allow similar guaranties against risks of revolution, insurrection, and related civil strife. I propose also that the Congress double the availability of such guaranties.

CONTINGENCY FUND AND OTHER PROGRAMS

The experience of this year has shown, as in the past, that there will arise each year contingencies for which funds will be urgently needed -- but which cannot be foreseen at all or with sufficient clarity to program in advance. For the current year I asked $200 million for such eventualities. Heavy demands, arising from the crises in the Middle East and from needs elsewhere, have already been made on the $155 million appropriated -- with several months of the fiscal year remaining. I still believe that $200 million is the smallest sum which safety and prudence recommend and I ask that this sum be provided for fiscal year 1960.

I recommend that we continue our support of the United Nations Children's Fund, our help in the resettlement of refugees from communism, our program of atoms-for-peace and certain other small programs we are now engaged in. The International Cooperation Administration will need an increase in its administrative funds, particularly to help obtain more persons of high qualifications for service abroad and to strengthen our representation at key posts in Africa and Latin America. For all these purposes I ask $112 million.

SOME FISCAL CONSIDERATIONS

The total sum I request for the Mutual Security Program for fiscal year 1960, $3,929,995,000 is slightly less than I asked last year. Each category and item in it has been weighed in terms of the contribution it will make to the achievement of the important objectives the program is designed to serve. The total amount is well under one percent of the gross national product our country will enjoy in the coming year. It is approximately 5 percent of our national budget. The greater part will go for military equipment to our allies and for economic support directly related to defense. The remainder, for aid to the economic growth we are most anxious to promote amounts to less than 2 percent of our national budget, under one-third of one percent of our national production. At the end of the present fiscal year the military assistance pipeline will be at the lowest level in its history and will be further reduced by next year's expenditure which willsubstantially exceed the new appropriation I am now asking. The economic assistance pipeline will, as in recent years, be barely enough to keep the program flowing without serious interruption.

The true measure of this national security program is what we have gotten and will get for our expenditures and what the cost would be without it. Over the years we have received returns many times the value of our investment. Our first great work, the Marshall Plan, cost less than projected, ended on time, and revived Western Europe from the destruction of the war to a group of thriving nations, now among our best customers and strongest allies, many of whom are now joining with us in assistance to the newly independent nations.

Our military and economic aid has been indispensable to the survival and gradual progress of nation after nation around the perimeter of Asia from Greece to Korea and others in Africa and our own hemisphere. When I hear this program described as a "give-away" or "aid to foreigners at the expense of domestic programs," I wonder what sort of America we would have today -- whether any funds would be available for any domestic programs -- whether all of our substance would not today be devoted to building a fortress America -- if we had not had such a program: if the key nations of Europe had been allowed to succumb to communism after the war, if the insurrectionists had been allowed to take over Greece, if Turkey had been left to stand alone before Soviet threats, if Iran had been allowed to collapse, if Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia were now in Communist hands, if the Huks had taken control in the Philippines, if the Republic of Korea were now occupied by Communist China. That none of these tragedies occurred, that all of these nations are still among the free, that we are not a beleaguered people is due in substantial measure to the Mutual Security Program.

CONCLUSION

The realities of this era indicate all too clearly that the course of our country will be deeply affected by forces at work outside our borders. These forces if left to exploitation by extremists will inevitably lead to changes destructive to us. Yet with wisdom and tenacity it lies within our power to frustrate or to shape these forces so that the peoples directly concerned and our own ntion may be benefited.

We cannot safely confine Government programs to our own domestic progress and our own military power. We could be the wealthiest and the most mighty nation and still lose the battle of the world if we do not help our world neighbors protect their freedom and advance their social and economic progress. It is not the goal of the American people that the United States should be the richest nation in the graveyard of history.

In the world as it is today -- and as it will be for the foreseeable future -- our Mutual Security Program is and will be both essential to our survival and important to our prosperity. It not only rests upon our deepest self-interest but springs from the idealism of the American people which is the true foundation of their greatness. If we are wise we will consider it not as a cost but as an investment -- an investment in our present safety, in our future strength and growth, and in the growth of freedom throughout the world.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON DEBT LIMIT, INTEREST RATES

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's June 8 message to Congress requesting an increase in the national debt limit and removal of the interest rate ceilings on savings bonds and Treasury bonds:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Successful management of the debt of the Federal Government is one of the most important foundation stones of the sound financial structure of our Nation.

The public debt must be managed so as to safeguard the public credit. It must be managed in a way that is consistent with economic growth and stability. It must also be managed as economically as possible in terms of interest costs. The achievement of these goals is complicated today by several factors, despite the fact that United States Government securities are the safest investment in the world. Our growing prosperity, combined with Government programs to support mortgages and other types of debt obligations, has strengthened the position of these mortgage and other investments with which the Treasury must compete when it sells Government securities.

In addition, the rapid growth in borrowing demands of corporations, individuals and state and local governments (which issue tax-exempt obligations) tends to diminish the amount of funds available for investment in direct Federal Government securities. Furthermore, the market for all fixed dollar obligations has been affected by a recent preference among some buyers for common stocks.

The achievement of a fiscal position that allows our revenues to cover our expenditures -- as well as to produce some surplus for debt retirement -- will improve substantially the environment in which debt management operates. Greater flexibility of debt management action is required, however, under present-day conditions if a reasonable schedule of maturities is to be maintained and the safeguards against inflation strengthened.

I am, therefore, asking the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the Congress today proposed legislation designed to improve significantly the Government's ability to manage its debt in the best interest of the Nation.

The legislation provides principally for:

(1) Removal of the present 3.26 percent interest rate ceiling on savings bonds. This, together with other changes, will reinvigorate the savings bond program.

(2) Removal of the present 4-1/4 percent interest rate ceiling on new issues of Treasury bonds. The present ceiling seriously restricts Treasury debt management and is inconsistent with the flexibility which the Secretary of the Treasury has on rates paid on shorter-term borrowing.

(3) An increase in the regular public debt limit from $283 billion to $288 billion, and an increase in the temporary limit from $288 billion to $295 billion. These increases are essential to the orderly and prudent conduct of the financial operations of the Government, even with expenditures covered by revenues in the fiscal year 1960, as the budget proposes.

Savings Bonds

Removal of the present 3.26 percent maximum limit on savings bond interest, together with certain other changes, will permit the Treasury to improve the terms of savings bonds. This will strengthen the contribution of the program both to habits of thrift throughout the Nation and to a better structure of the public debt.

The Treasury is proposing the following revisions in the savings bond program, subject to approval of enabling legislation: A 3-3/4 percent interest rate to maturity for all Series E and H Savings Bonds sold on or after June 1, 1959; an improved interest rate on all Series E and H bonds outstanding and continued to be held; and improved extension terms for outstanding Series E bonds when they mature.

4-1/4 Percent Maximum Interest Rate on New Bond Issues

There is no statutory maximum on the interest rate which can be paid by the Treasury for marketable borrowing of five years or less (bills, certificates and notes). The Secretary of the Treasury should have similar flexibility with regard to Treasury bonds (which run five years or more to maturity).

The Treasury always tries to borrow as economically as it can, consistent with its other debt management objectives. But in our democracy no man can be compelled to lend to the Government on terms he would not voluntarily accept. Therefore, when the Government borrows, it can do so successfully only at realistic rates of interest that are determined by the supply and demand for securities, as reflected in the prices and yields of outstanding issues established competitively in the Government securities market.

I am aware of the fact that many proposals have been made which are designed to produce lower interest rates. However, any debt management device which would seek to interfere with the natural interaction of the competitive forces of our free economy and produce unnatural reductions in interest rates would not only breach the fundamental principles of the free market, but under current conditions could be drastically inflationary. The additional cost to the Government alone from increased prices of the goods and services it must buy might far exceed any interest saving. The ultimate harm to the entire Nation of such a price rise could be incalculable.

Market yields on a number of Treasury bonds are already above 4-1/4 percent. With one exception all bonds which have five years or more to run to maturity have market yields above four percent. The Treasury recently has done substantial short-term borrowing. But it must avoid undue shortening of the public debt and therefore should continue to sell intermediate and longer-term bonds whenever market conditions permit. It should not be prohibited from doing so by the existence of an artificial ceiling which under today's conditions makes it virtually impossible to sell bonds in the competitive market.

Debt Limit

The Treasury's current estimates, assuming that revenues cover expenditures for the fiscal year 1960 as a whole, indicate the need for an increase in the regular (or permanent) statutory public debt limit from $283 billion to $288 billion. The $288 billion figure is $13 billion above the permanent limit of $275 billion in effect at the beginning of the fiscal year 1959. This $13 billion increase is approximately equal to the Federal Government deficit during the current fiscal year, as estimated in the budget submitted in January.

The Treasury expects the debt to approximate $285 billion on June 30, 1959, leaving about $3 billion leeway under the proposed $288 billion regular ceiling -- a leeway which is essential to protect the Government in case of unforeseen emergencies and to provide necessary flexibility in debt management operations.

Even with budget receipts covering expenditures in the next fiscal year the debt is expected to rise considerably above $288 billion next fall and winter as the Treasury borrows to cover seasonal needs. This seasonal borrowing can then be repaid before the end of the fiscal year. I am asking, therefore, for a temporary increase of $7 billion in the public debt limit beyond the $288 billion permanent ceiling to cover those seasonal borrowing needs. This temporary limit would expire June 30, 1960 and can be reviewed prior to that time.

Certain other technical proposals to improve the management of the public debt are also included in the proposed legislation.

The enactment of this program is essential to sound conduct of the Government's financial affairs. It will contribute significantly to the Treasury's ability to do the best possible job in the management of the public debt. I urge, therefore, that the Congress give prompt consideration to this request.

There is another matter to which I wish to call your attention, quite apart from the legislative program discussed above. When I submitted my budget to you in January interest costs on the public debt for the fiscal year 1960 were estimated at $8 billion. The increase in interest rates that has taken place since that estimate was made is now expected to add about half a billion dollars to this figure.

At the same time, however, I am informed that, because of the strength of economic recovery and growth beyond our earlier expectations, our revenue estimates for fiscal year 1960 will be sufficient to offset the increased interest cost in the public debt.

MESSAGE ON HIGHWAYS, FHA LOANS

Following is the text of President Eisenhower's Aug. 25 message to Congress urging legislation to increase the Federal Housing Administration's loan insurance authority and to raise the Federal gasoline tax:

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

On Wednesday of this week I shall leave for Europe on a mission important to the security and welfare of the American people. This mission will require my absence from the country for about 10 days. Unavoidably, it comes while the Congress is in what may be the concluding days of a session, and while important items of legislation are under consideration.

Before I leave I should like to comment on two matters that involve Government programs now in progress which would be seriously hampered in the absence of appropriate action by the Congress.

1. FHA LOAN INSURANCE AUTHORIZATION

The Congress is well aware of the important services performed by the Federal Housing Administration in insuring mortgage loans for Americans who wish to buy homes. Not all homes are purchased under FHA, but a large number are, and it is important that there be no forced reduction in its activities. Yet this is exactly what will happen if additional loan insurance authorization is not available to FHA at an early date.

The Administration has repeatedly requested the Congress to grant FHA an increase in its loan insurance authority. I renew this request, and suggest that it be passed in a separate piece of legislation. An increase in FHA's loan insurance authority should not be made contingent upon the possibility of approval by the President, after the Congress has adjourned, of legislation which contains features that the Administration finds seriously objectionable and that are entirely unrelated to FHA's home loan insurance program.

2. HIGHWAYS

As I have repeatedly stated, there is an urgent national need for legislation to allow the Interstate Highway Program to proceed at a steady rate. Both the Congress and the Executive are justly proud of the vast highway construction program enacted in 1956. A good beginning has been made on this program, and it is inconceivable that it should be allowed now to come to a halt. For traffic safety and convenience, as well as to meet the requirements of a growing economy, it is essential that we continue to build new, modern roads.

Last January I recommended a temporary increase of 1½¢ in the Federal tax on gasoline in order to maintain the planned highway construction schedule on a pay-as-you-go basis. The recent action by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in approving an increase of 1¢ for two years represents a step in the right direction. Although it would mean some slowing down of present construction rates, a 1¢ tax increase would allow a reasonable rate of progress to be maintained.

A small increase in the tax on gasoline is the best way to put the Interstate Highway Program on a self-supporting pay-as-you-go basis. I must express again my objection to proposals that would, in the absence of foreseeable budget surpluses, divert receipts from the General Fund of the Treasury that are collected from various excise taxes on automobiles. The transfer of these receipts to the Highway Trust Fund would only shift the fiscal problem from the Highway Trust Fund to the General Fund, which is already in precarious balance. I should also make clear that I do not favor proposals that would finance anticipated deficits in the Highway Trust Fund over the next several years by the issuance of bonds.

CONGRESS OVERRODE ONE OF 20 VETOES IN 1959

Congress in 1959 overrode an Eisenhower veto for the first time since the President took office in 1953. The vote came on a public works appropriations bill (HR 9105) vetoed by the President Sept. 9 because it authorized 67 new starts on water projects the President opposed. The House overrode the veto Sept. 10 on a 280-121 roll-call vote -- 12 votes more than the 268 votes, or two-thirds majority, needed to pass the bill over the veto. The Senate, also Sept. 10, voted 72-23 to override -- a margin of eight votes over the necessary two-thirds majority.

It was the first Presidential veto overridden since 1952, when the House voted 278-113 and the Senate 57-26 to pass the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act over Harry S. Truman's veto. (1952 Almanac p. 246)

The Sept. 10 action was Congress' second chance in 1959 to pass a public works appropriation over the President's veto. On Aug. 28 an earlier public works bill (HR 7509) was vetoed by the President but the House sustained the veto. The President also vetoed two omnibus housing bills but the Senate, which attempted to override the veto on each, failed both times. Congress eventually passed a third omnibus housing bill that the President signed.

The President in 1959 vetoed a total of 20 bills, bringing his total from 1953 through 1959 to 157 vetoes. Among all United States Presidents, Mr. Eisenhower ranked fourth in the number of bills vetoed during his term of office. The leader was Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1933-45) who vetoed 631 bills in his 12 years in office (nine vetoes were overridden). In second place was Grover Cleveland (1885-89, 1893-97), who vetoed 584 bills (seven vetoes were overridden). In third place was Harry S. Truman (1945-53), who vetoed 250 bills (12 vetoes were overridden).

Mr. Eisenhower's total of 157 vetoes in nearly seven years was considered relatively small, taking into account that Congress was controlled by the opposition party for all but the first two of his years in office. The year-by-year record of Eisenhower vetoes:

Year	Regular Vetoes	Pocket Vetoes	Total
1953	4	6	10
1954	17	25	42
1955	3	8	11
1956	9	14	23
1957	3	9	12
1958	15	24	39
1959	10	10	20
	61	96	157

President Eisenhower in 1959 vetoed 11 public bills and nine private bills. The public bills were:

S 144 -- Rural electrification (see story p. 314)

S 1901 -- Tobacco price supports (see story p. 242)

S 1968 -- Wheat program (see story p. 238)

S 57 -- Omnibus housing (see story p. 245)

HR 6940 -- Alaska mineral leases (see story p. 175)

HR 7509 -- Public works appropriation (see story p. 315)

S 2539 -- Second housing bill (see story p. 245)

HR 9105 -- Public works appropriation (see story p. 315)

HR 6596 -- Coal research commission (see story p. 228)

HR 8728 -- To extend from April 1, 1960 to April 1, 1961 the date for beginning Federal registration of power boats under the Federal Boating Act of 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 328) In his veto message, President Eisenhower said Congress in the Mutual Security Appropriation Act of 1960 had provided the Coast Guard with the funds to carry out the program and the extension was no longer necessary. HR 8728, introduced by Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.) Aug. 19, was passed by the House Aug. 31 and the Senate Sept. 9. It was pocket vetoed by the President Sept. 21.

HR 3735 -- To increase retirement benefits for certain District of Columbia employees. The President said inequalities already existed in the D.C. employees retirement system and that HR 3735 would increase the "present disparity." The bill was introduced by Rep. John L. McMillan (D S.C.) Jan. 29 and passed by the House June 8 and the Senate Sept. 10. President Eisenhower pocket vetoed the measure Sept. 24.

Private Bill Vetoes

S 611 -- To grant Harry H. Nakamura one year in which to file a claim under a 1948 law governing claims resulting from the evacuation of persons of Japanese ancestry during World War II. Nakamura allegedly lost about $113,000 when liquidation of his business was forced by his evacuation from California in 1942, but he failed to file a claim by Jan. 3, 1950, the legal deadline under the law. President Eisenhower said the relief proposed by S 611 would "be discriminatory and would create an undesirable precedent." S 611 was introduced by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), by request, Jan. 21. It was passed by the Senate April 29 and the House June 23. Mr. Eisenhower vetoed the bill July 8.

HR 2717 -- To permit the Eber Brothers Wine and Liquor Corp., Rochester, N.Y., to file income tax refund claims for 1947 and 1948. President Eisenhower in his veto message said the claims were barred by the statute of limitations and that to provide special relief would "discriminate against other taxpayers" and "create an undesirable precedent." HR 2717 was introduced Jan. 15 by Rep. Jessica McC. Weis (R N.Y.). It was passed by the House March 17 and the Senate Aug. 27. The President vetoed the bill Sept. 14.

This veto was challenged on the Senate floor Sept. 14 by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), who suggested that the President had waited too long to veto the bill. At issue was the question of whether the constitutional veto period of 10 days, excluding Sundays, began when a bill reached the White House office or when it reached the President himself. The presiding officer declined to answer, calling it "a question for legal determination."

HR 3096 -- To grant Peony Park Inc. and eight other Nebraska ballroom operators refunds of cabaret taxes for a period during which the tax statute was not uniformly applied throughout the Nation. The President said the bill not only would refund to the nine claimants a tax which the courts had ruled was properly collected, "but it would also discriminate against many other similarly situated taxpayers.... Furthermore, the bill might unjustly enrich its beneficiaries by refunding the cabaret tax without regard to whether the ultimate burden of the tax was borne by the claimants or passed on to their patrons." HR 3096 was introduced by Rep. Glenn Cunningham (R Neb.), passed by the House May 19, passed by the Senate Sept. 10 and pocket vetoed Sept. 21.

HR 2631 -- To pay the estate of Nathaniel H. Woods a refund for estate taxes erroneously paid and on which a refund claim was not filed within the legal period of limitations. The President said the statute of limitations "is essential in order to achieve finality in tax administration" and that to grant special relief in this case would be discriminatory and "create an undesirable precedent." HR 2631, introduced by Rep. Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), was passed by the House Aug. 18 and the Senate Sept. 10. It was pocket vetoed Sept. 22.

HR 6335 -- To refund to Mrs. Lourene O. Estes income taxes paid on disability payments received from her employer before the Supreme Court ruled that such payments were excludable from gross income. Mr. Eisenhower said that during the 85th Congress he approved legislation to give general relief, on a non-discriminatory basis, in such cases but that the legislation did not provide relief for persons like Mrs. Estes who did not file timely claims for refund. To provide special relief in this case, he said, would be discriminatory and create a undesirable precedent. HR 6335 was introduced by Rep. James C. Davis (D Ga.). It was passed by the House July 7 and the Senate Sept. 9. President Eisenhower pocket vetoed it Sept. 22.

HR 1387 -- For the relief of Mrs. Mary D'Agostino in the death of her serviceman son. Mr. Eisenhower said the bill, which would waive the time limitation on claims and retroactively apply liberalized benefits, "would be discriminatory and would create an undesirable precedent." Introduced by Rep. Hugh J. Addonizio (D N.J.), the bill was passed by the House June 23 and the Senate Sept. 10. It was pocket vetoed Sept. 23.

HR 1434 -- To pay Mrs. Elba Haverstick Cash for the death of her son as a result of maltreatment in a Veterans Administration hospital. Mr. Eisenhower said Mrs. Cash already was receiving monthly payments under the "generous, comprehensive and assured system of benefits provided for the survivors of veterans who die, in whatever manner, as a result of hospitalization by the VA." In such cases, he said, "I firmly believe that the assured and general benefits to which survivors are entitled by law should be their exclusive remedy." HR 1434 was introduced by Rep. A.S.J. Carnahan (D Mo.). Passed by the House June 2 and the Senate Sept. 10, it was pocket vetoed Sept. 23.

HR 8277 -- For the relief of Harold William Abbott and other persons who did not meet the legal deadline for filing claims for refund of certain transportation taxes. Mr. Eisenhower said the relief proposed by the bill was discriminatory and "would create an undesirable precedent." Introduced by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D Fla.), HR 8277 was passed by the House Aug. 18 and the Senate Sept. 9. It was pocket vetoed Sept. 23.

HR 2068 -- For the relief of Howard F. Knipp, whose claim for tax relief had been denied by the Federal Court of Appeals. President Eisenhower said approval of the bill "would encourage demands for legislation overruling court decisions in individual cases and would create an undesirable precedent." Introduced by Rep. Samuel N. Friedel (D Md.), HR 2068 was passed by the House July 7 and the Senate Sept. 11. It was pocket vetoed Sept. 25.

SECTION 7

86th CONGRESS... 1st SESSION

1959 PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

President Eisenhower's 1959 appointments received more attention and were subjected to more controversy than those in any previous year of his Administration. A major appointment was rejected for the first time since Mr. Eisenhower took office and another appointee resigned as a result of a stormy confirmation battle. Until 1959 Mr. Eisenhower had been the first chief executive since William Howard Taft to escape having any major civilian nomination rejected by the Senate.

Of interest to the entire world was the appointment of Under Secretary Christian A. Herter to succeed cancer-stricken John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State. Dulles submitted his resignation April 15 because his illness had left him "incapacitated for carrying on the administrative load, in addition to assisting in the making of policy." Herter's selection was announced April 18 and quickly confirmed by the SenateApril 21 in a 93-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 404) He was sworn into office April 22; and April 23, in a ceremony at Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, Dulles was sworn in as special consultant to the President on foreign policy. Dulles died in his sleep May 24 of cancer complicated by pneumonia.

Before his appointment as Under Secretary of State in 1957, Herter had served in the House of Representatives (R Mass. 1943-53) and as Governor of Massachusetts (1953-57). During his term in the House, he earned distinction as chairman of a Select Committee on Foreign Aid (the Herter Committee). The group's studies and evaluation of United States foreign policy were credited with helping win Congressional approval of the Marshall Plan.

Dulles' death left only two members of the original 1953 Eisenhower cabinet in office: Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson and Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield.

Defense Secretary Neil Hosler McElroy resigned Dec. 1 to return to Proctor & Gamble, of which he had been president. President Eisenhower then named Thomas S. Gates Jr. of Pennsylvania to succeed McElroy. Gates, whose recess appointment would be subject to confirmation in the next session of Congress, had been serving as Deputy Secretary of Defense since June 4, 1959.

Controversial Nominees

The most controversial nomination in 1959 was that of Lewis L. Strauss as Secretary of Commerce. After long and bitter debate, the nomination was rejected by the Senate June 19. (See story below) On July 21 the President submitted, and Aug. 6 the Senate confirmed by voice vote the nomination of Frederick H. Mueller of Grand Rapids, Mich., as Secretary of Commerce. Mueller had served as Under Secretary of Commerce since Dec. 3, 1958 and as Acting Secretary since Strauss' June 30 resignation. From 1956 to 1958, Mueller was Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Domestic Affairs.

Another nomination storm arose over the President's choice of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. Although the Senate confirmed Mrs. Luce April 28, the acrimony surrounding the confirmation was such that she submitted her resignation a few days later. (See story below.)

The Senate May 5 confirmed, by a 70-17 roll-call vote, the nomination of Potter Stewart of Cincinnati, Ohio, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. (For voting, see chart p. 410) Stewart, a former Federal judge on the sixth circuit court of appeals, had been serving under a recess appointment since Oct. 14, 1958. All Senators who voted against the confirmation were Southern Democrats. Stewart had said at committee hearings, "I would not like you to vote for me on the assumption...that I am dedicated to the cause of overturning (the Court's 1954 segregation) decision. Because I am not." Southern opposition did not center on Stewart directly but concentrated on such Southern concerns as the segregation decision and states' rights, plus a belief that making recess appointments to important office lessened the Senate's power to "advise and consent."

Judgeships

Congress in 1959 failed once more to alleviate the heavily overburdened Federal judicial system by creating more judgeships. As in the past, political considerations affected Congressional handling of the Administration's and Judiciary's requests to create new judgeships in both district and circuit courts. Despite President Eisenhower's offer, relayed through Attorney General William P. Rogers Aug. 27, to appoint Democrats to half of any new judicial posts created, no final action was taken in either house.

Omnibus judgeship bills were introduced in both houses in 1959 (HR 6159 and S 890), based on recommendations of the Judicial Conference. The conference, consisting of the Chief Justice of the U.S. and the chief judge of each of the U.S. courts of appeals, March 19 recommended the creation of 43 additional judgeships. The House bill was not reported out of committee in 1959 and the Senate bill was not reported until Sept. 10 (S 2673 -- S Rept 997). When the 1959 session ended Sept. 15, the Senate bill, which would create three new circuit and 22 new district court judgeships, had not received floor consideration.

The Committee report noted that S 2673 was the fourth omnibus judgeship bill it had approved since 1954, when Congress last enacted a bill creating new judgeships (PL 83-294). The record shows a history of last-minute release of such bills by the Senate and House Judiciary Committees -- just before the adjournment of Congress each time. A bill was approved by the Senate Committee Aug. 5, 1958, but not in time to be reported before the 85th Congress adjourned Aug. 24. The House Committee in 1958 did not release its bill until Aug. 11. (1958 Almanac p. 76) In 1956, the House Judiciary reported an omnibus judgeship bill June 25, the Senate Committee on July 18, and the 84th Congress adjourned July 27, without passing either bill.

The Senate Judiciary Committee in 1959 also dragged its heels on President Eisenhower's 38 judgeship nominations to Federal district courts and courts of appeals.

In an Aug. 27 floor speech, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) said the Judiciary Committee was damaging the Senate's reputation by failing to act on judicial nominations; Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) Aug. 24 said the Committee's delays were "absolutely shocking."

By Sept. 2, only 14 of the nominations had been approved by the Committee. Between Sept. 2-8, the Committee approved 13 more nominees. Of these, 10 were approved Sept. 8, a day after President Eisenhower named Joe J. Fisher, a Texas Democrat supported by Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), to the

Boxscore on Judgeships

During the 1959 session, President Eisenhower made appointments to fill 37 vacant U.S. district and circuit court judgeships (of these, 26 were district court vacancies and 11 were circuit court vacancies). Because he withdrew one nomination, the President had to appoint a replacement, making a total of 38 individuals nominated for the 37 posts. 1959 action:

- One nomination (that of John G. Tucker to the U.S. district court for the eastern district of Texas) was withdrawn.
- 34 nominations (including that of Joe J. Fisher, Tucker's replacement) were confirmed by the Senate.
- Three nominations had not received final Judiciary Committee approval when the Senate adjourned Sept. 15. These nominations were scheduled to expire automatically 30 days from the end of the session. They involved: J. Joseph Smith of Connecticut (2nd circuit court of appeals); Charles F. Paul of West Virginia (northern West Virginia district court); and William H. Timbers of Connecticut (District of Columbia district court).

district judgeship for East Texas. The President Feb. 12 had named Republican John G. Tucker to the East Texas court but withdrew the nomination Aug. 3 when the Committee failed to act on it for five months. Tucker was reported to be opposed by Johnson.

Seven more judges were confirmed before Congress adjourned Sept. 15 (see box).

Ex-Congressmen, Governors

Several former Republican Senators, Representatives and Governors and one former Democratic Representative were appointed to Federal posts in 1959. Most of these appointees had been defeated in the 1958 elections. Following is a list of those appointed and their current Government jobs:

Richard B. Wigglesworth (ex-Rep. R Mass. 1929-1959), Ambassador to Canada.

Lane Dwinell (ex-Gov. R N.H. 1955-59), Assistant Secretary of State.

John J. Allen Jr. (ex-Rep. R Calif. 1947-59), Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation.

Frank A. Barrett (ex-Sen. R Wyo. 1953-59), general counsel of the Department of Agriculture.

Sigurd Anderson (ex-Gov. R S.D. 1951-55), member of the Federal Trade Commission (reappointment).

Brooks Hays (ex-Rep. D Ark. 1943-59), member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Joseph E. Talbot (ex-Rep. R Conn. 1941-47), member of the U.S. Tariff Commission (reappointment).

Arthur V. Watkins (ex-Sen. R Utah 1946-59), consultant on water and power matters to the Secretary of Interior; later, Associate Commissioner of the Indian Claims Commission.

Cecil M. Harden (ex-Rep. R Ind. 1949-59), special assistant to the Postmaster General.

David Dennison (ex-Rep. R Ohio 1957-59), consultant to the Civil Rights Commission.

Errett P. Scrivner (ex-Rep. R Kan. 1943-59), special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller).

Robert D. Harrison (ex-Rep. R Neb. 1952-59), consultant to the Commodity Credit Corp. Board of Advisers, Department of Agriculture.

Robert W. Kean (ex-Rep. R N.J. 1939-59), chairman of the National Advisory Committee for the 1961 White House Conference on Aging (no compensation).

A.L. Miller (ex-Rep. R Neb. 1943-59), Director of the Office of Saline Water, Department of Interior.

Henry O. Talle (ex-Rep. R Iowa 1939-59), assistant administrator for program policy, Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Abe McGregor Goff (ex-Rep. R Idaho 1947-49), member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

STRAUSS NOMINATION

The Senate's rejection of Lewis L. Strauss as Secretary of Commerce June 19 came after months of acrimonious debate, hearings and public charges and countercharges. Long-standing feuds over issues, differing philosophies of government and sharp personality conflicts all were elements in this protracted controversy, but the final vote adhered closely to party lines. On the June 19 roll-call vote two Republicans -- Sens. William Langer (N.D.) and Margaret Chase Smith (Maine) -- and 47 Democrats voted against the nomination; 31 Republicans and 15 Democrats -- all but four of them from the South -- voted for the confirmation. (For voting, see chart p. 417)

Background

Strauss, a financier and a World War II admiral, had been serving as Acting Secretary of Commerce since his Nov. 13 recess appointment to succeed Sinclair Weeks. He was the eighth cabinet appointee ever to be rejected by the Senate and the first since the Senate in 1925 refused to confirm Calvin Coolidge's appointment of Charles B. Warren, who had been counsel for the "Sugar Trust," as Attorney General.

Before his appointment to the Commerce post, Strauss served as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, 1946-50, and as chairman of the Commission, 1953-58. It was during his service on the commission that many of the issues brought up in the 1959 controversy first arose: the J. Robert Oppenheimer security problem, the Dixon-Yates power contract (1955 Almanac p. 533), the "clean" bomb and the shipping of isotopes to Europe. Another, much more general, friction point was the difference between Strauss' "conservative" approach to government and the more liberal approach of some of his opponents, particularly the Western Democratic Senators who opposed him.

Committee Hearings

Strauss' nomination was sent to the Senate Jan. 17. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held hearings on it intermittently from March 17-May 14. Hearings had been scheduled to begin Feb. 25 but were postponed at the request of Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.). Kefauver Feb. 24 said he sought the delay pending a reply to his Feb. 16 letter to Attorney General William P. Rogers, requesting Justice Department findings on Strauss' role in the Dixon-Yates contract. Rogers' reply, released later Feb. 24, said there were no findings "which reflect adversely on Mr. Strauss."

TESTIMONY -- March 17 -- Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) told Strauss there would be "many, many questions and subjects gone into" before the Committee sent the nomination to the Senate floor.

In a prepared statement Strauss reviewed his qualifications for the Cabinet post. He said he had accepted the appointment because he believed the Department of Commerce could "most effectively" counter "the economic warfare which the Soviet Government has declared upon the United States."

The testimony centered on the Soviet Union's offensive in the field of world trade. Strauss said he favored strict enforcement of regulations barring export to Russia of goods the Soviets conceivably could use in hot or cold war against the United States.

March 18 -- Strauss protested against being "kept on probation so long" and told Magnuson he was concerned about the effect the delay would have on the morale of the department.

It was announced there would be no further hearings until April 7. Magnuson April 8 announced the hearings would be resumed after he returned to Washington April 13, but set no definite date. Magnuson also announced that Kenneth A. Cox of Seattle had been named as special counsel for the hearings.

TESTIMONY -- April 23 -- Strauss appeared before the Committee for the third time. Magnuson said Strauss might be recalled for additional testimony after witnesses opposing his confirmation had been heard; he denied the Committee was delaying Strauss' confirmation.

April 28 -- Kefauver gave the first testimony against Strauss. He urged the Committee to make "a thorough investigation" of Strauss' role in the Dixon-Yates contract. Committee Republicans said Kefauver was making unsubstantiated charges against Strauss, but Kefauver said evidence adduced in previous Congressional investigations of the contract would bear out his accusations.

(President Eisenhower at his April 29 news conference defended Strauss.)

"TRIAL BY INNUENDO"

April 30 -- Strauss told the Committee Kefauver had "engaged in the technique of trial by innuendo." He defended his role in the Dixon-Yates negotiations and said he still regarded the contract as advantageous to the Government and said he would approve it again if the circumstances were the same. (The U.S. Court of Claims July 15 rejected, 3-2, the Government's contention that the contract was invalid. The court awarded Dixon-Yates $1,867,545 in damages for cancellation of the contract. See 1955 Almanac p. 553)

April 30 -- Dr. David R. Inglis, chairman of the Federation of American Scientists, said the federation's executive council voted 25-1 to oppose Strauss' nomination. Inglis said he would feel safer "about the future of our national security" if Strauss were not in the Cabinet because Strauss had "substantial defects of character" and as Atomic Energy Commission chairman (1953-58) had shown a "narrow dedication...to the single-track approach of modern weaponry with no toleration for negotiations as a parallel track toward future security." (Strauss was also an AEC member from 1946-50.) Inglis said Strauss, in the 1954 J. Robert Oppenheimer case, had acted with "personal vindictiveness" and had "deliberately dragged in the dirt" the concept of intellectual freedom. Inglis also charged Strauss had opposed sending radioactive isotopes to Europe for medical purposes. (See below)

May 1 -- In a point-by-point rebuttal, Strauss said Inglis' charges were "in disregard of objectivity and fact." He denied advocating a "single-track" approach toward security based only on nuclear retaliation.

May 4, 5 -- Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, said "there should be a vigorous examination of the powers of the Department of Commerce in the past and an appraisal of what they might become in the hands of Admiral Strauss, were he now to be confirmed."

Anderson said (1) Strauss' qualifications for public office had never been fully examined. He cited alleged tactics used to evade full hearings on Strauss when he was nominated for AEC membership.(2) Strauss should provide Congress with personal financial information to "cover not only his direct holdings but any indirect devices by which he owns or participates in the control of financial undertakings." (3) Strauss, as AEC chairman, had made "repeated" and "deliberate efforts to avoid keeping the Joint Committee fully and currently informed on key matters" in accordance with law. He charged that Strauss withheld "through the device of executive privilege considerable information" in the 1954-55 Dixon-Yates controversy; had timed a press release on the "clean bomb" atomic tests to maximize publicity while bypassing the Joint Committee; and had "held out important information" concerning AEC plans to transfer secret blueprints of the Nautilus submarine to the British. (4) Strauss had "manipulated secrecy labels for his own public relations." (5) Strauss had sought to "create myths about his accomplishments," particularly on establishment of a long-range detection system and development of the H-bomb.

FALSEHOOD CHARGE

Anderson also said Strauss had told an "unqualified falsehood" in testifying May 1 that, in effect, he had not in 1949 opposed shipment of radioactive isotopes to Europe to be used for medical purposes. Anderson said the 1949 date given by Strauss was "phony" because the decision to make the shipment had actually been taken in 1947 by a 4-1 AEC vote, with Strauss opposed.

Following Anderson's testimony, Strauss May 5 said he believed "the American people...want something better from Washington than what appears to be a pattern of persecution" and "defamation of a plain man who has done his best as he sees it for his country." Earlier May 5, President Eisenhower, at his news conference, supported Strauss as "a man of the utmost integrity and competence in administration."

May 6 -- Testifying in support of Strauss, Dr. Edward Teller, director of the Radiation Laboratory, Livermore, Calif., cited as examples of Strauss' "longstanding, warm and effective support of science" the facts that under Strauss' AEC chairmanship two scientists were appointed to the AEC instead of one; that the AEC's budget for pure research was increased; and that the program to harness the H-bomb for peaceful purposes was launched.

May 6, 7 -- Strauss read a prepared statement in rebuttal of Anderson's charges: (1) Strauss said Anderson never before had raised "suspicion" about his earlier nomination and that his (Strauss') confirmation for AEC chairman did not take place in a "devious and irregular manner." He cited a 1953 statement by Anderson saying the members of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee "were happy to report favorably the nomination of Admiral Strauss." (2) Strauss said he had already listed for the Committee the commercial equities which he owned and was prepared to submit additional and more detailed financial information. (3) Regarding Dixon-Yates, "no information was withheld by me," Strauss said. "I deny that I invoked executive privilege" to withhold "considerable information." (4) Strauss said the frequency of communication of reports and letters from the AEC to the Joint Committee had tripled during his term as AEC chairman. Strauss said past executive directors of the staff of the Joint Committee, other than the one serving under Anderson, had voluntered to testify as to his "complete and unqualified cooperation with the Joint Committee." (5) Concerning the Nautilus information and secrecy in general, Strauss said he recognized "no failure on the part of the AEC or myself to have complied in letter and in spirit with the law." (6) Strauss cited evidence designed to show his efforts to speed development of the H-bomb and detection systems. Strauss added he "created no myths" and made no claims that he had done "it all." (7) Strauss cited a photostat of a note he wrote Aug. 24, 1949 stating he was not opposed to the isotope shipment to Europe if the isotopes were to be used for medical or basic scientific research, or instruction purposes, but was opposed to sending them if for military or industrial use. He also said there was not a vote on the shipment, 4-1 or otherwise, in 1947.

May 7 -- Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) said Democrats' questions might appear "picayune" on the surface, but Strauss' answers were building up in the minds of some Senators, "piece by piece, a mosaic made up of a pattern of half fact rather than full fact."

Ex-Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio 1946-59), a former member of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, said he always had found Strauss "honest, sincere, and patriotic," and never knew him to refuse information.

SCIENTISTS DISAGREE

May 8 -- Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, president of the National Academy of Sciences and of Rockefeller Institute, said he had known Strauss since 1947 when Strauss was a "wise and helpful" member of the Naval Research Advisory Committee and had displayed a "remarkable" interest and understanding of science and scientists. Bronk said Strauss in 1953 arranged for him to meet with the then Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, to discuss the dismissal of Dr. Allen V. Astin as director of the Bureau of Standards. Bronk said many scientists deemed Astin's dismissal inappropriate, and that the meeting with Weeks resulted in his reinstatement.

David L. Hill, New York nuclear physicist, criticized Strauss' role in stripping nuclear physicist J. Robert Oppenheimer of his security clearance. He said there was "a kind of madness and irrationality which went through the whole case," attributable to Strauss. Questioned by Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.), Hill acknowledged he had shown an advance copy of his statement to the Committee's special counsel, Kenneth Cox, and had been advised to "tone down" his language. Scott said he drew "no implications from the matter," but felt it should "have the light of day."

May 11 -- Ranking GOP Committee member Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) said in a prepared statement that Democrats, outnumbering Republicans 11-6 on the Committee, had kept the minority "in the dark" on the hearing agenda, and shown "an extraordinary hostile approach" to Strauss. Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) said he was "getting a little bit fed up with these innuendoes and insinuations that this is a persecution of some kind."

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) said in a prepared statement that Strauss' record indicated an absorption with executive secrecy, and that confirmation should be denied if that record represented his approach to appointive Federal office.

Strauss told the Committee he never would withhold information from Congress as "a political judgment." He termed an "unqualified lie" a May 5 news story by columnist Drew Pearson that Strauss had used a "top secret" document as background in quizzing Dr. David R. Inglis, a scientist who April 30 testified in opposition to Strauss.

May 13 -- Strauss said he had asked the AEC about Inglis' scientific background and whether he had clearance after Pearson's column appeared. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) produced a May 11 letter from AEC Chairman John A. McCone which said Strauss had asked about Inglis' work on April 20, and that the Commerce Department April 30 had asked AEC about Inglis' clearance.

Countering Anderson's earlier charges that Strauss had opposed isotope shipments to Europe for medical purposes, Strauss read from a 1949 cable from the American Embassy in Oslo to the State Department, which said the Norwegians wanted the isotope "to develop alloy for jet or gas turbine use...."

May 14 -- The Committee wound up the hearings with further testimony from Anderson and Strauss.

Committee Action

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee May 19 voted 9-8 to recommend Senate confirmation of Strauss as Secretary of Commerce.

The Committee's report (Exec Rept 4) on Strauss, not filed until June 4, carried six separate statements of views. The majority opinion recommending confirmation was signed by six Republicans and two Democrats: Sens. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), John Marshall Butler (R Md.), Norris Cotton (R N.H.), Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.), Hugh Scott (R Pa.), Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) and Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio). They said the Committee hearings showed that Strauss fully met the major requirements for a cabinet officer: honesty and integrity, competence and a record of cooperation with Congress. Testimony adverse to Strauss, the majority said, stemmed mainly from differences with his "judgment and philosophy, or from inferred affronts to personal or official dignity."

Sen. John O. Pastore (D R.I.) said he had found Strauss to be "patriotic, honorable and competent" and qualified for the nomination. Sens. Schoeppel, Thurmond and Lausche said that, as former Governors, they felt a chief executive should have the "widest latitude" in choosing members of his official family or cabinet.

Minority views were signed by seven Democrats: Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.), George A. Smathers (Fla.), Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas), Clair Engle (Calif.), E.L. Bartlett (Alaska), Vance Hartke (Ind.) and Gale W. McGee (Wyo.). They concluded that Strauss, "partly on evidence as to his past record, but mostly on the basis of his conduct" before the Committee, was

"lacking in the degree of integrity and competence essential to proper performance" as Secretary of Commerce. They criticized his performance as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and charged him with numerous "untruths" in testimony, adding that "Mr. Strauss seems unable to confess to error in any way."

Magnuson, in a separate statement condemning Strauss' role in the Dixon-Yates affair, predicted that as Commerce Secretary he would continue to promote "policies not in the public interest."

A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) criticized Strauss for evasive testimony. He said that citizens, through their Congressmen, "are entitled to receive from the officials of the Executive Branch, not merely literal truth, but full information, freely given without design to soothe, to confuse or to divert...this cannot be expected of Mr. Strauss," Monroney concluded.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS

Between the Committee vote and the start of Senate debate June 5, there were these developments:

May 20 -- Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) said the nomination would not be made a political matter; the Democratic leadership would take no formal position on Strauss.

Sen. William Langer (R N.D.) became the first, and only, Republican to announce opposition to Strauss before the vote.

May 21 -- Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) of the House Appropriations Committee said Strauss had made "misstatements" to the Senate Committee in challenging the accuracy of a 1956 transcript of his statement to a Cannon subcommittee. (1956 Almanac p. 639) The transcript contained a statement by Strauss taking responsibility for a letter which a majority of the House Appropriations Committee later characterized as being "willfully duplicitous." (Five GOP members of Cannon's committee May 23 supported Strauss' remarks.)

May 23 -- William Mitchell, AEC general counsel at the time the allegedly "duplicitous" letter was written, said Strauss "did not see the letter until...after it had been sent" and was not responsible for "any defects" that may have been in it.

May 26 -- Sen. Gale McGee (D Wyo.) in the first of a series of speeches opposing confirmation, said Strauss had "tried to deceive a committee of the Senate" on his role in the "duplicitous" letter incident.

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) predicted Strauss would be confirmed.

May 28 -- Several Democratic Senators expressed indignation at a newspaper report that Strauss intended to appoint Armand G. Erpf, a partner in the New York investment firm of Carl M. Loeb, Rhoades and Co., to head a Commerce Department transportation study. Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) said the firm was the owner of record of more than $22 million worth of railroad securities and that putting Erpf in charge of the study "would be like putting a cat in a cage to study canaries."

June 1 -- Erpf asked to have his name withdrawn from consideration for the transportation study job.

June 2 -- Dirksen said the President had authorized him to say the Strauss nomination "will not be withdrawn," even if Strauss himself should request it.

Rep. Steven B. Derounian (R N.Y.) said he had been told "that the opposition to Strauss, in reality, is based on religious prejudice. If that is true, it revolts me as an American citizen." Strauss is Jewish.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) denied anti-Semitism was a factor in the opposition to Strauss and said two unnamed Jewish leaders had phoned him to say they were "concerned" about "this false bit of propaganda."

June 3 -- Sen. John Marshall Butler (R Md.) said the rejection of Strauss would be an "unparalled injustice."

June 4 -- Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) said a poll he had taken of Illinois physicists showed 69 percent of those who took a stand opposed Strauss.

Floor Action

The Senate June 5 began formal consideration of Strauss' nomination. The first week of debate consisted principally of set speeches by members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

DEBATE -- June 5 -- Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) -- Strauss is looked upon as "personifying a philosophy of government which some feel impelled to combat and destroy. Mr. Strauss, quite simply, is a conservative.... He has always stubbornly resisted anything which seemed to him to be an undue encroachment by the Legislative Branch."

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) -- Defended his Committee's performance at the hearings on the nomination, denied there was an "inquisition" or that Democrats had been pressured to vote against Strauss.

Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- If Senators would "put aside differences in political and economic philosophies" and concentrate on the "pertinent qualifications of the nominee, the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of confirmation."

June 9 -- George A. Smathers (D Fla.) -- A constituent, David Nemerov, confessed sending Smathers 47 telegrams urging confirmation of Strauss, some of them over unauthorized signatures. "Strauss was totally unaware of my action," Nemerov said. Smathers said he received 500 telegrams in three hours just before the Committee voted on Strauss but in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he would regard all but the 47 as legitimate.

Gale W. McGee (D Wyo.) -- When the hearings began, "I stood ready to vote for confirmation," but Strauss' use of "the techniques of evasion and deception...changed my vote."

Hugh Scott (R Pa.) -- "In all my career I have never before witnessed such a well-planned attempt at legislative lynching....(Yet) in 16 days of hearings I saw no evidence to justify an adverse recommendation on this nomination. Lewis Strauss' competence, patriotism and excellent background were never challenged."

June 10 -- Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- "I believe that the President should be given wide latitude in the selection of his Cabinet.... I would not vote against Mr. Strauss because I disagreed with him on policy matters -- and I do disagree with him on policy matters. I believe the President is entitled to Cabinet officers who reflect the views of his Administration...." But the Senate has a constitutional responsibility in confirming Cabinet appointees and, though his initial leaning was to favor confirmation, evidence as to Strauss' failure to cooperate with Congress or provide complete and accurate information led to his negative vote in Committee.

(United Mine Workers officials June 12 told reporters Strauss had sought and been promised help by UMW President John L. Lewis because Lewis approved Strauss' stands in favor of private development of atomic power and import quotas on residual oil.)

June 12 -- Howard W. Cannon (D Nev.) -- Asked for an investigation of "lobbying tactics" used on Strauss' behalf "to discover why (his) confirmation...is so important to certain special interests."

June 13 -- George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- Although he was inclined to vote for Strauss, it was "very disturbing to see the coal and oil industry working as hard as possible to get the nomination confirmed."

June 15 -- Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- "The campaign of character assassination" against Strauss would make it hard to recruit capable men for public service.

June 16 -- John A. Carroll (D Colo.) and Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) -- Charged that Strauss had used the doctrine of "executive privilege" to withhold information from Congress, "weaken its authority and damage the public interest."

(President Eisenhower June 17 told his news conference, in answer to Democratic charges of Executive lobbying for Strauss, "I'm going to use every single influence that I can" to win confirmation for him.)

June 17 -- Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) -- Strauss was "unfit" because "he has consistently and cynically sought to deceive the American people."

Vote On Nomination

The Senate June 19 rejected Strauss' nomination by a 46-49 roll-call vote. Republicans William Langer (N.D.) and Margaret Chase Smith (Maine) joined 47 Democrats in opposing the nomination; 31 Republicans and 15 Democrats voted for confirmation. (For voting, see chart p. 417)

The final vote came at 12:35 a.m. June 19, after the Democratic leadership had forced the Senate into more than 12 hours of continuous session. The speedup tactic was adopted after several days' efforts had failed to obtain a unanimous consent agreement on a time for a vote.

During the final hours of debate, Republican Senators held the floor to delay a vote until three of their absent colleagues could return to Washington. Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.) and Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) flew back from speaking engagements in the West in time to vote. Milton R. Young (R N.D.) was delayed in returning from his home state, but Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), who was present, agreed at the last moment to pair with Young, eliminating the necessity for a further delay.

The only Senator who did not record his stand on the nomination was J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.). He had been in the Senate prior to the vote but was officially reported to be absent because of illness when the roll was called.

The four leading Democratic Presidential possibilities -- Sens. Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas), Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Stuart Symington (Mo.) -- all opposed the Strauss nomination.

LATER DEVELOPMENTS

After the vote the President and Strauss issued formal statements and others speculated on the political repercussions of the controversy.

June 19 -- Mr. Eisenhower told a special press conference: "It is the American people who are the losers in this sad episode." He again commended Strauss.

Strauss commented: "It has been a privilege to have served our country for so many years. I have done the best I knew how to do -- to protect and defend the national security even when that was not the recognized, nor easy, nor popular course of action at the time. I leave with the confidence that history will be just."

June 19 -- Fulbright, who had been announced as absent because of illness, said: "I just couldn't resolve the question satisfactorily, and under the circumstances I thought it was wiser not to vote, with the outcome as close as it was. It is still a difficult question and I don't know whether the Senate did right or not."

In the aftermath of the voting, several Republicans blamed Majority Leader Johnson for causing Strauss' defeat. Johnson did not explain his vote against the nomination, but he was reported to have warned Dirksen a week before the vote that continued pressure for confirmation from high Administration officials would cause the Senate to reject the nominee.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon June 19 said the public "will be outraged by the arbitrary and vindictive action on the part of some of the people in the Senate." He said Johnson "won the victory but he will lose the war. It is questionable whether the Senate defeat of Strauss will help his (Johnson's) ambitions."

Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.), who voted for Strauss in the belief his rejection might damage the President's prestige abroad, June 20 said the bitter Senate battle "might initiate a period of extreme partisanship between the President and the Senate, if not between the two parties in the Senate."

Both Dirksen and Strauss' leading opponent, Sen. Anderson, said they doubted the Strauss nomination would become a political issue between the parties.

June 30 -- Strauss formally resigned as Secretary of Commerce.

LUCE, REID NOMINATIONS

Strong controversy also centered on two of President Eisenhower's ambassadorial appointments, resulting in the resignation of one and close Senatorial scrutiny of the other.

Mrs. Luce

The President Feb. 26 nominated Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce to succeed career diplomat Ellis Briggs as ambassador to Brazil. Mrs. Luce had served as Republican Congresswoman from Connecticut (1943-47) and as ambassador to Italy (1953-56). She was the wife of Henry R. Luce, editor-in-chief of Time, Life and Fortune.

A one-day hearing on her nomination was held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee April 15.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and Chairman J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.) criticized her for a 1944 campaign speech in which she said President Franklin D. Roosevelt "lied us into war." Mrs. Luce apologized for the language but said she still believed Roosevelt should have said candidly the United States was "going to have to fight the Nazis." Fulbright also said a 1952 campaign speech she made implied that President Harry S. Truman was a traitor, but Mrs. Luce said, "Certainly not."

The Committee postponed a vote on her confirmation for a week.

The Committee April 23 voted 16-1 to approve Mrs. Luce's nomination. Morse, the lone dissenter, said he would make a floor fight against confirmation.

Floor Action

The Senate April 28 confirmed the nomination by a 79-11 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 408) During debate Morse April 27 called the nomination an example of the Eisenhower Administration's "practice of paying off political hacks" with diplomatic appointments. He called her 1944 statement about Roosevelt a "monument to her qualifications in political demagoguery."

Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.) said the Morse attack was unjustified and that Mrs. Luce had demonstrated her qualifications for able service.

It was after the confirmation vote that the controversy reached a climax. At a press conference later April 28, Mrs. Luce, expressing appreciation for her confirmation, said: "My difficulties, of course, go back some years when Sen. Wayne Morse was kicked in the head by a horse." (He suffered a broken jaw at a horse show in 1951.)

Senators reacted sharply to her remarks. Morse read Mrs. Luce's statement to the Senate and said, "This is part of an old pattern of mental instability on her part."

Sens. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) and Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), who had voted to confirm her, said they regretted their votes. Sen. Gale McGee (D Wyo.) took the same position, saying it would be unwise to send an ambassador "who might make the sort of intemperate statements Mrs. Luce just made."

Following these developments, Henry R. Luce April 28 issued a statement in which he said that his wife had been vindicated by the vote of confirmation, but that her usefulness as ambassador had been jeopardized by the "vendetta" against her and he had asked her to offer her resignation.

RESIGNATION ACCEPTED

President Eisenhower, at his April 29 press conference, defended Mrs. Luce's remarks as "human" and said he felt there had been no major impairment of her usefulness as ambassador. On May 1 he accepted her resignation, in which she said that in view of Morse's position as chairman of the Latin American Subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee she could expect "continuing harassment" if she accepted the post in Brazil.

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) May 1 said he would ask the Senate to censure Morse for acting with "the height of irresponsibility" in attempting to contact Mrs. Luce's physician, during the time the Senate was considering her nomination, to inquire if she ever received psychiatric treatment. Morse, in a May 4 statement, said Capehart should file a censure resolution to "let the Senate pass judgment upon his unwarranted accusation...." Capehart took no further action.

Ogden R. Reid

The nomination of Ogden R. Reid March 10 as ambassador to Israel was the next Eisenhower selection to draw heavy Senate fire. The major criticism of Reid, 33-year-old former publisher of the New York Herald Tribune, was based on his youth and inexperience. Other elements contributing to the controversy over the nomination were rumors that Reid would use his post as a stepping-stone in a political career, and the accident of timing -- consideration of his nomination followed closely upon the Luce fracas.

Committee Hearings

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee May 12 held a brief preliminary hearing on Reid's nomination. Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) told Reid it was up to him to demonstrate his qualifications, and that a "distressing aspect of this question of amateur diplomats" was that too many of them had no intention of remaining in service long enough to acquire competence.

Reid said he believed "thoroughly" in Fulbright's "concepts" of an examination and welcomed "the most searching inquiry." The hearings were then recessed until May 19.

TESTIMONY -- May 19 -- Fulbright opened the hearing by saying Reid's age and lack of diplomatic experience or knowledge of the Middle East made a "prima facie case against" his qualifications for the post; it was up to Reid to impress the Committee with his fitness. Reid said he felt "very strongly that maturity -- judgment, calmness, thoughtfulness of approach -- is not solely a function of years."

Reid also said reports he planned to use the Israel post as a springboard to run for mayor of New York City were "totally untrue;" he had no political ambitions whatever; he hoped to serve as a diplomat "as long as this country would want me to do so." Reid said he had not sought the appointment; it had been offered to him on the initiative of former Secretary of State John Foster Dulles.

Reid said he had spoken to nine Senators to ask support for his confirmation. Fulbright said Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban had visited him and spoken highly of Reid, but Reid said he had not requested Eban to make the call; such a request would have been "the height of impropriety." Reid also said he and his wife were studying Hebrew and that his experience as editor and publisher of the New York Herald Tribune had trained him as an observer, so that he could report Israeli affairs accurately to the Government.

At the conclusion of the hearings, Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) said Reid had done a "creditable job" in presenting his qualifications. Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) said Reid "impressed me most favorably" and Sen. William Langer (R N.D.), who said he previously opposed Reid, said he would vote for confirmation.

ACTION -- The Committee May 26 voted 10-4 (D 4-4; R 6-0) to recommend Senate confirmation of Reid. The nomination was opposed by Fulbright, Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Russell B. Long (D La.) and John F. Kennedy (D Mass.).

Democrats John J. Sparkman (Ala.) and Frank Church (Idaho) did not vote. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) was absent.

Following the vote, Sen. Green, former chairman of the Committee, said Reid had given "no evidence of the background, knowledge or competence" needed for a post "in one of the most critical areas of the world."

Fulbright said the majority of the Committee was "unwilling to depart" from the tradition of confirming all ambassadorial nominations, but the tradition was "obsolete" and the appointment of men of no diplomatic experience was partly to blame for the "decline in the influence of the United States" abroad.

Floor Action

The Senate June 4 confirmed Reid's nomination by voice vote. The vote came after an hour of discussion during which opposition to Reid's nomination was led by Fulbright.

DEBATE -- June 4 -- Fulbright -- Important diplomatic posts "should be filled by the most able career men or by exceptionally qualified non-career appointees." To send Reid to the "explosive" Middle East is "improvident and irresponsible."

John Stennis (D Miss.) -- Supporting Fulbright, said he would "vote for and use my influence to support those who are in the diplomatic corps as a career."

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Reid is a young man of "extraordinarily broad experience in the field of international relations, and in the business world as well." He "has flatly denied that this nomination has anything to do with any domestic political ambitions on his part; in fact, he has stated categorically that he has no political ambitions...."

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- "He is a qualified and good selection...and is entitled to confirmation."

NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

President Eisenhower sent 46,934 nominations to the Senate in 1959, the bulk of which were military and postmaster appointments. Of the 43,567 which were confirmed, the following were major appointments:

Executive Departments

AGRICULTURE

Clarence Ludlow Miller, Ky., Assistant Secretary and Director of the Commodity Credit Corp.; confirmed Feb. 6.

CQ Fact Sheet On How Lobbies Fared

LOBBIES EXPECT MORE ACTION FROM CONGRESS IN 1960

Major lobbies see election year 1960 as the decisive one as far as their legislative hopes and fears are concerned.

Most of the lobbyists surveyed by Congressional Quarterly looked upon the 1959 Session of the 86th Congress as a preliminary to the main bout, except for the case of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959.

They contended the stand-off between President Eisenhower and the Democratic-controlled Congress on major issues postponed several hard policy decisions, such as what role the Federal Government should play in city programs like slum clearance and airport construction.

Although most of the lobbyists expect decisive action in 1960, a spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation, largest farm lobby, said the imminence of the 1960 Presidential election would discourage authorization of long range programs to solve such pressing problems as the farm surplus. He predicted neither party will want to act until it knows which party will win the Presidency.

Here is a round-up of principal gains and losses among major lobbies in 1959 and their objectives for 1960. Organizations are listed under the subjects which enlisted much of their activity but this does not mean that they did not have other interests.

Business

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSN. (representing 17,000 banking officials) -- M. Monroe Kimbrel, chairman of ABA's Federal legislation committee, Sept. 18 said "judged by any reasonable standard," the 1959 Session of Congress "has been a good year for banking legislation. Banking's views have been accorded a fair hearing and constructive attention. We cannot fairly expect more." He cited as a principal victory enactment of the bill (S 1120) authorizing the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to permit member banks to "count all or part of their currency and coin as reserves." The effect of adding this so-called vault cash to reserves was to permit banks to expand their lending power. He also praised the bill (HR 8160) which increased the ceiling on a national bank's borrowing authority from 100 percent of capital to 100 percent of capital plus 50 percent of surplus.

● The two other major legislative goals of the ABA did not become law in 1959 but made progress and will be pushed in 1960. One was the bill (S 1062) to place final authority over bank mergers in the Federal bank supervisory agencies rather than in the Justice Department as several other proposals provide. The Senate passed S 1062 May 14, but the House did not act. A fourth objective of the ABA is a bill (HR 7950) to increase the income taxes on savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks. The commercial banks pushing the measure contend the present laws tax 41 percent of their net income but only 1 percent of the net income of savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks. The associations and mutual banks counter the bill amounts to "punitive" legislation and many have resigned from ABA in protest against the stand.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE U.S. (representing 3,400 local and state chambers of commerce) -- Passage of a stiff labor bill stood out among the Chamber's victories. It also pressed for a balanced budget and said that over-all in 1959 "Congress has established a reasonable economy record. This, of course, is in large measure due to the leadership of the President as well as the moderate leadership in Congress." Other Chamber victories included the fact that Congress did not: broaden the application of the minimum wage law; set Federal standards for unemployment compensation; regulate such administered prices as those in the auto industry; tighten antitrust laws by saying lowering prices to meet competition was not necessarily an air-tight defense against price discrimination charges; authorize massive aid to general education; increase the Federal contribution to such standing programs as airport construction; send money into areas suffering from chronic unemployment; regulate business mergers; set aside primitive areas of the United States as wilderness for perpetuity.

Chamber setbacks included passage of legislation to: finance public works projects despite Mr. Eisenhower's veto; provide more Federal money for construction of local sewage plants (the bill passed both the House and Senate but was not sent to the President in 1959); allow the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue revenue bonds to expand its facilities. Another major disappointment was Congress' failure to raise the 4.25 interest rate on long term bonds issued by the Federal Government.

● The Chamber in 1960 will press anew for achievement of its old goals. Its emphasis will be on cutting Federal spending. It will distribute a movie in an effort to build up public support for its legislative policies.

NATIONAL ASSN. OF MANUFACTURERS (representing 20,300 business firms) -- The NAM said "Industry's legislative program fared extraordinarily well during the First Session of the 86th Congress." It praised the labor bill and hailed the refusal of Congress to heed "multi-billion dollar spending demands from New Dealers." The NAM attributed "the favorable outcome" of the 1959 Session to "an irresistible upsurge of public opinion against wasteful Government spending and against union corruption; the sharp upturn in business conditions, which completely deflated the New Deal contention that big Government spending was imperative to lift the economy out of a recession; President Eisenhower's veto power." But the NAM cautioned its members: "Failure to pass many measures opposed by industry may be but a reprieve until next year...."

Specific legislative victories and defeats for the NAM were largely the same as those listed for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. The NAM characterized as a

"major achievement" passage of the bill (S 2524) to limit the taxing power of states on interstate businesses. Instead of allowing several states to levy income taxes on interstate businesses, S 2524 said income taxes could not be levied if the only activity within the state was getting orders to be filled outside the state.

● In 1960 the NAM will concentrate on enactment of tax reform legislation (HR 3000, 3001) to reduce corporate and personal income taxes to a maximum of 47 percent (corporate maximum is 52 percent) in five annual reductions. The House Ways and Means Committee held hearings on tax reform legislation Nov. 16-Dec. 18.

SOUTHERN STATES INDUSTRIAL COUNCIL (representing 2,000 business firms in the 16 Southern states from Texas to Maryland) -- Legislative objectives of the Council followed closely those of the Chamber and NAM. But the Council was especially eager for Congress to pass so-called "states rights" legislation (HR 3, S 3) which would limit application of the Federal preemption doctrine by state or Federal courts. The failure of this legislation stood out among Council's setbacks while the labor law was the major victory.

● Like the Chamber and NAM, the Council will press for Federal economy in 1960 and renew its campaign for enactment of the states rights legislation. It also will campaign against continuance of the present foreign aid program.

Small Business

AMERICAN RETAIL FEDERATION (representing 70 state and national retail associations with a total membership of 800,000) -- A Federation spokesman rated the labor bill as the biggest victory, especially the provision eliminating the "no-man's land" in the Taft-Hartley Act. The 1959 labor bill authorized state labor boards and courts to handle labor-management disputes that the National Labor Relations Board refused to touch. The new labor law upset a 1957 U.S. Supreme Court decision which held only the Federal Government could handle labor disputes of interstate businesses. The retailers also welcomed provisions in the labor law closing loopholes in the secondary boycott and organizational picketing rules in the Taft-Hartley Act. A negative victory was the failure of Congress to broaden the application of the minimum wage law. However, an Association spokesman predicted the big fight over that issue would occur in 1960.

● The Association sees these as its primary legislative goals for 1960: prevention of minimum wage extension to retail businesses; repeal of the 10 percent excise taxes on furs, luggage, jewelry and toilet preparations; enactment of legislation (HR 2, 13) to let small businesses deduct from taxable earnings a portion of the money they plow back into the business; enactment of the so-called Keogh-Simpson bill (HR 10) to permit self-employed persons to defer paying income taxes on money set aside for retirement; and opposition to the Forand bill (HR 4700) to provide Federal health insurance for those eligible for social security benefits.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS (representing 110,000 businessmen) -- Major victory was the labor reform bill.

● The Federation in 1960 will press for enactment of the bill (S 11) to tighten the antitrust laws regarding price discrimination; repeal of certain excise taxes, and special tax consideration for small business.

Civil Rights

AMERICANS FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION (representing 45,000 individuals) -- Robert R. Nathan, national chairman, Sept. 15 said "a very meager achievement, even for a First Session, sums up the record of the 86th Congress. The myth of the magic of 'moderation' as a legislative formula in these times of immoderate difficulties and dangers has, we hope, been shattered once and for all by the long list of unmet needs...." Legislative setbacks, in the view of ADA, included passage of the "destructive, punitive" labor reform bill and Democratic cuts in the mutual security program. A backer of stronger civil rights legislation, ADA decried Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson's (D Texas) alleged "inability to control the Democrats" on this issue and "the Administration's desertion of its pledges on civil rights."

● ADA in 1960 will push for such legislation as a strong civil rights bill, Federal aid to education, broader Federal housing programs and area redevelopment legislation.

NATIONAL ASSN. FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE (representing 334,543 individuals) -- Suffered two major defeats in 1959: failure of the Senate to strengthen sufficiently its anti-filibuster rule (Rule 22) and refusal of the Congress to pass a broad civil rights bill. About the only achievement in the civil rights field in 1959 was a last minute two-year extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

● Liberals in Congress shortly before the 1959 Session adjourned received assurances that substantial civil rights legislation would be considered early in 1960. Enactment of a strong bill will be the NAACP's main objective in 1960.

Education

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION (representing 1,107 national and regional associations and institutions mostly at the college level) -- Major legislative objectives in 1959 were a $500 million addition to the Federal college loan fund for construction of dormitories and a new $250 million loan program to build college classrooms. The Housing Act of 1959 finally signed by the President Sept. 23 provided for $250 million for the college dormitory loan program but nothing for classrooms.

● In 1960, another broad housing bill will be written. The Council will press for additional money for college housing and classrooms.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSN. (representing 664,000 teachers and school administrators) -- NEA's prime legislative objective in 1959 was a bill (S 2, HR 22) to provide ultimately $4.4 billion a year to build schools and raise teachers' salaries. This Murray-Metcalf bill never got farther than the House Rules Committee.

● The NEA will continue to press for general aid to education in 1960, but it may decide to support a bill less broad than its 1959 one.

Farm

Congress in 1959 did nothing toward solving the number one problem in agriculture, the growing mountain of surplus bought and stored with taxpayers' money under a patch-quilt of farm laws.

In a special message to Congress Jan. 29, the President proposed that price supports for twelve subsidized commodities be related to a percentage of their average market price for the immediately preceding years rather than parity -- the standard figure set by the Government in an effort to arrive at a fair price for crops. If Congress could not go along with the proposal, the President said it should give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to fix price supports as he saw fit rather than obligating him to pay specific percentage of the parity price. Congress adopted neither recommendation.

As a result, none of the three major farm lobbies could point to a substantial legislative victory in 1959. These are the organizations and the general approaches they are expected to take in 1960 to solve the farm income problem:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION (representing 1.6 million farm families) -- Favors letting the open market rather than Federal price supports determine prices on crops. However, a Federation spokesman was frankly pessimistic about getting any long range legislation through Congress until after the 1960 Presidential election.

NATIONAL FARMERS UNION (representing 300,000 farm families) -- Favors more, not less, Federal assistance to farmers.

NATIONAL GRANGE (representing 860,000 individuals) -- Favors a blend of the Farm Bureau and National Farmers Union approaches. It wants Federal help only under certain conditions and believes long range farm legislation should be tailored to individual commodities rather than agriculture as a whole. Its domestic parity plan calls for the Federal Government to set quotas on the amount a farmer could produce. The Government would agree to buy the quota of crops if the market price fell below the set price. The farmer could raise more than his quota but would have to sell it at the going price on the open market. The subsidies on the quota crops would be financed by charges levied on users of the produce.

A Grange spokesman predicted "much of the same" for 1960 as far as Congress was concerned. He said there was a "philosophical deadlock" between the Eisenhower Administration and the Democratic leadership in Congress that would be broken only by the 1960 elections.

Federal-City Relations

AMERICAN MUNICIPAL ASSN. (representing 12,530 municipalities) -- Patrick Healy Jr., executive director, said "the cities' problems were favorably recognized" in Congress but ran into serious opposition from President Eisenhower. The AMA in 1959 pressed for $100 million a year in Federal grants to help cities build airports; $100 million a year to build community sewage plants; $600 million a year for 10 years for slum clearance. They achieved about "half-a-loaf" on these programs: $63 million for airports; passage of a more liberal sewage grant program by both the House and Senate but not sent to the President; $650 million over two years for slum clearance. Other setbacks included failure of: depressed areas legislation to get out of the House Rules Committee; the bill (HR 3151) authorizing the Federal Government to withhold city payroll taxes from its employees' salaries, and the bill (HR 5944) to extend Federal low-interest loans to cities having trouble raising money for such community facilities as sewer and water systems. Legislative victories included extension of the Air Pollution Control Act of 1955 and the Senate's approval of the appointment of a commission to study metropolitan problems. On the metropolitan commission, the House and Senate did not agree before adjournment on the same bill but are expected to do so early in 1960.

- In 1960, AMA will press its 1959 objectives anew. A major fight will be over the broad housing bill Congress is expected to write in 1960, especially its authorizations for Federal grants for slum clearance.

Housing

NATIONAL ASSN. OF HOME BUILDERS (representing 40,000 home builders) -- The NAHB, since it represents builders, welcomes legislation which makes it easier to buy homes. The Housing Act of 1959 did this by liberalizing FHA mortgage requirements and was therefore a legislative victory for the NAHB. Another "plus" for the NAHB was enactment of the bill (HR 2256) raising the interest rate from 4.75 percent to 5.25 percent on Veterans Administration guaranteed mortgages and authorization of $100 million for direct housing loans to veterans.

- The NAHB in 1960 will press for provisions favorable to builders when the new housing bill is written and is expected to continue its campaign for establishment of a central mortgage bank. The NAHB wants a clearing house for mortgages so that there would be a traffic center for directing mortgage money from plentiful to scarce areas, making it easier for would-be owners to get money to buy a house.

NATIONAL ASSN. OF REAL ESTATE BOARDS (representing 60,000 realtors) -- The realtors' group, like the builders', scored on those parts of the omnibus housing bill which made it easier to buy a house. Specifically, the NAREB listed as victories the provisions of the housing bill which: increased the maximum FHA-insured single-family mortgage from $20,000 to $22,500; extended the section 221 sales housing program (designed to make it easier for those displaced by such government activity as highway construction to buy a home) to profit organizations and to multi-family houses if the owner agreed to rent to families displaced by government activity; authorized a new housing program for the elderly; increased to $20,000 the maximum mortgage eligible for purchase by the Federal Government's mortgage broker, the Federal National Mortgage Assn.; extended the Voluntary Home Mortgage Credit Corp. to Oct. 1, 1961, and the home improvement program to Oct. 1, 1960.

Legislative setbacks included Congress' failure to enact the self-employed persons' retirement bill (HR 10) and the bill (S 1138) which would make peace-time veterans eligible for GI housing loans.

- The NAREB will press for these objectives in 1960 and will fight efforts to broaden the public housing program.

NATIONAL HOUSING CONFERENCE (representing 3,000 individuals interested in housing) -- Frank Servaites, executive vice president, in appraising the 1959 Session of Congress, said: "Housing, which should be non-partisan, was given a decided political complexion.... The country will be pushed back a bit further in meeting the well known housing needs as a result of this limited and fragmented legislation." He said the Housing Act of 1959 did little more than give existing programs "another year's lease on life."

● In 1960, he said the Conference would press for "a total approach to the country's housing problem." Besides pushing for more money for such existing Federal programs as urban renewal and public housing, the Conference will fight for low interest direct loans for middle income families.

Labor

AFL-CIO (representing 13.1 million workers) -- The 1959 Session was disastrous to the AFL-CIO in the eyes of its leadership. It lobbied vigorously against the labor reform bill enacted, the strongest of three under consideration by Congress. Other AFL-CIO setbacks included the failure of Congress in 1959 to: broaden minimum wage coverage; provide Federal money to build schools; authorize Federal health insurance for the elderly; repeal section 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act which authorizes states to forbid union shop agreements; pass depressed areas, substantial civil rights or public works legislation.

● In 1960, the AFL-CIO is expected to draw up another list of objectives similar to the 1959 ones.

RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSN. (representing 23 railway labor organizations) -- Railway labor presented a unified front in 1959 and pushed through Congress a bill (HR 5610) raising retirement benefits for workers by 10 percent and increasing employer and employee taxes to pay for them. The bill was fought by the Assn. of American Railroads.

● In 1960, the RLEA will concentrate on fending off the railroad industry's campaign to amend old railroad laws which management claims amount to "union featherbedding."

Public Power

AMERICAN PUBLIC POWER ASSN. (representing 1,000 publicly owned electric systems) -- An APPA spokesman said "public power registered important gains" in the 1959 Session, citing passage of the bill (HR 3460) permitting the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue revenue bonds to raise money for expansion of facilities and appropriations to construct a Federal power plant on the Trinity River in California and a transmission line to bring Missouri Basin power into Iowa. It also considered as a victory authorizing two atomic power plants, instead of the one proposed by the Atomic Energy Commission, for consumer-owned utilities under the AEC's construction program. Association legislative setbacks included the service area limitation placed on TVA; the refusal of Congress to appropriate funds to start power projects at Yellowtail Dam in Montana, Green Peter in Oregon, and Melton Hill dam, Tennessee.

● In 1960, the Association will oppose removing the tax exemptions on interest from state and local bonds and on the income of municipally owned utilities. It will press for: establishment of a Bonneville power corporation and construction of a power line from Bonneville to Northern California; money for the long sought Passamaquoddy power project in Maine, acceleration of the Government's atomic energy power program, and "adequate" appropriations for new and existing power projects.

NATIONAL RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSN. (representing 930 cooperatives and public power districts who borrow from the Rural Electrification Administration) -- Said "the consensus is that rural electrification fared well" in 1959. The NRECA cited the same gains listed by the American Public Power Assn. It also considered it a victory that Congress took no action on bills to raise the interest rate on REA loans.

The major defeat for NRECA was the failure of Congress to override President Eisenhower's veto of the bill (S 144) to give the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Agency, rather than the Secretary of Agriculture, final authority to approve or disapprove REA loan applications.

● In 1960, the NRECA will press for largely the same objectives as the American Public Power Assn. and will fight higher interest rates on REA loans.

Transportation

In contrast to 1958, when the Transportation Act was enacted, there was little legislative activity in the transportation field in 1959. The airplane and railroad lobbies hailed the reduction of the 10 percent tax on passenger travel to 5 percent starting July 1, 1960 while the truckers were pleased that continuance of the Interstate Highway program was assured, although they would have preferred to see the needed money come from the general fund than from additional taxes on highway user items.

● Principal objectives of the major transportation organizations in 1960:

AIR TRANSPORT ASSN. (representing 47 certificated scheduled air carriers)

● The ATA, will continue its campaign to reduce the scope of operations of the Military Air Transport Service and oppose restrictive legislation which might be prompted by complaints about noise from commercial planes.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE INSTITUTE (representing 50 merchant marine companies)

● The Institute in 1960 will press for revision of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 which limits the Federal subsidy to 50 percent of the ship's construction cost.

AMERICAN TRUCKING ASSNS. (representing 50 state trucking associations and 11 truckers' conferences) -- Characterizing 1959 as "mild insofar as transportation legislation is concerned," an ATA spokesman said much of the legislation "seemed to be in the form of preliminary bouts awaiting the Second Session." The ATA in 1960 will fight efforts to let railroads go into the trucking business.

ASSN. OF AMERICAN RAILROADS (representing 196 railroads in the U.S., Canada and Mexico) -- Daniel P. Loomis, president, Sept. 22 said that in 1959 the AAR had to devote its efforts "to holding the line against adverse action rather than taking strides forward." He cited the AAR's successful fight against amendments to the Transportation Act of 1958 which would have made it harder for the railroads to discontinue unprofitable commuter service. The biggest legislative defeat for the railroads was the enactment of the legislation increasing railroad workers' retirement benefits. (See Railway Labor Executives Assn. item above.)

● In 1960, the AAR will press for: authority to branch out into other forms of transportation; higher user charges on competing forms of transportation; less state and local taxes on railroad property and faster depreciation write-offs on its equipment.

CQ Fact Sheet On 1958 Lobby Spending

PRESSURE GROUPS' 1958 SPENDING TOPS $4 MILLION

The year 1958, which saw an unusually heavy volume of legislation enacted by Congress, also was a big year for the lobbies. The delicate business of pressuring Congress to achieve desired legislative goals was reported by the lobbies themselves to have cost $4,132,719.67 in 1958. (For list of spenders see p. 679)

This is the figure reached by Congressional Quarterly after a check of the spending reports submitted by 263 registered pressure groups during the year. The groups are required by the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 to register with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House and to file reports showing how much they spent to influence legislation each quarter. However, several weaknesses in the act have enabled the various lobby groups to decide for themselves the extent of Federal regulation.

For one thing, the act's vagueness on what constitutes lobby spending permits pressure groups to decide for themselves what they shall report as lobby expenditures. Some include everything from office rent to secretaries' salaries as money spent to influence legislation; others put down only a fraction of their operating costs as their expenses for lobbying.

In addition, interpretations by various Federal courts have tended to curtail the act's application. Finally, since there is no governmental agency charged with enforcing the act, some groups do not report at all and many consistently fail to meet the reporting deadlines.

Groups Reporting

Leading all registered pressure groups in lobby spending during 1958 was the AFL-CIO. With a multitude of legislative goals including liberalization of social security and unemployment benefits and Federal aid for school construction, the 15-million member union said it spent $133,348. Close behind were the American Tariff League Inc., which put out $131,749 in its unsuccessful campaign against extension of reciprocal trade legislation, and the National Federation of Post Office Clerks (AFL-CIO), which invested $113,099 in its more fruitful drive to secure a pay raise for its members. Fourth place went to the American Trucking Assns. inc. with reported expenditures of $105,618. The ATA fought for repeal of the 3 percent excise tax on for-hire freight and opposed the railroads' attempt to make basic changes in the rate-making policy of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Congressional Quarterly has divided the 263 registered organizations into six categories which reflect general legislative interests. Among organizations reporting lobby spending in 1958, 144 were engaged in business or in the promotion of business interests. They spent a total of $2,047,657.41. Employee and labor groups numbered 31 and reported spending $842,557.03. The professional category, which includes the American Medical Assn. and the National Education Assn., claimed expenditures of $365,535.98. Organizations representing various civic and social welfare interests, such as the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and Americans for Democratic Action, said they spent $426,252.44. Always a powerful voice in the halls of Congress, the farming interests, led by the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Farmers Union, invested $282,230.36 to influence the lawmakers. The veterans' lobby, with only six organizations reporting, spent a total of $168,486.45.

Top Spenders

Twenty-one organizations said they spent more than $50,000 on lobbying in 1958. The reported spending of the 21 groups compared to their spending reported for 1957:

Organization	1958	1957

LIST OF 263 REGISTERED LOBBIES AND WHAT THEY SPENT IN 1958

Following is a list of 263 registered lobby groups and the amounts which each reported spending in 1958 for lobbying activities. The organizations are divided into six categories: Business, Citizens, Farm, Veterans, Employee and Labor, and Professional.

Not all groups reported for each quarter; the number of asterisks following spending figure indicates the last quarter for which report was made. 1 (*) for first quarter, 2 () for second quarter, 3() for the third. All others reported at end of fourth quarter.

Law On Spending Reports

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires spending reports to be filed quarterly by anybody who "directly or indirectly, solicits, collects or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes: (a) the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S.; (b) to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S." A Supreme Court decision in 1954 (U.S. v. Harriss, 347 US 612) in effect limited the lobby law's applicability to "direct communication with Members of Congress."

The Act's vagueness on what constitutes lobby spending permits pressure groups to decide for themselves what they shall report as lobby expenditures. The Act specifies that all registered organizations file financial reports by the tenth day of the month following the end of the quarter.

Lobby Tax Ruling

The Internal Revenue Service Sept. 19, 1959 published proposed regulations regarding the tax deductions allowed for lobbying and trade organizations. The regulations largely were an explanation of how the service interpreted a 1919 regulation which since 1938 had applied to individual -- as well as corporate -- income.

The regulation reads: "Sums of money expended for lobbying purposes, the promotion or defeat of legislation, the exploitation of propaganda, including advertising other than trade advertising, and contributions for campaign expenses, are not deductible from gross income."

The Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1959 upheld an IRS ruling that this regulation forbade tax deductions for expenses in lobbying against legislation or state referenda considered harmful to business.

After asking for views by interested groups the IRS Nov. 12-13 held hearings on its proposals, which would deny tax deductions for dues paid to organizations which devote a "substantial" part of their activities to influencing legislation.

Trade organizations feared the regulations would cut down on companies' contributions; corporations worried about the effect on their public relations campaigns; advertising men and newspaper publishers foresaw a loss of revenue and the AFL-CIO disliked the ruling disallowing dues as a tax deduction.

At the IRS hearings a number of groups, including the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and the Advertising Federation of America, asked that adoption of the new regulations be postponed until Congress had an opportunity to act on the matter.

The Public Relations Society of America said "expenditures to defend a business from...burdensome or punitive legislation...certainly are an allowable cost of doing business."

CQ Fact Sheet On Spending, First Half of 1959

LOBBIES REPORT NEARLY $2 MILLION SPENT IN SIX MONTHS

During the first half of 1959, lobby organizations reported spending $1,877,802.65 to influence Congress. This figure was slightly less than double the amount reported spent during the first quarter of the year and just less than half the amount reported during all of 1958. (See p. 678)

The money spent in lobby activities in odd years -- the first session of each Congress -- is traditionally less than that spent in even years because Congress handles less legislation in the first session.

The Mutual Life Insurance Companies, Temporary Committee on Taxation headed the list of lobby spenders reporting $98,143.92 for the January-June period. Life insurance companies during 1959 lobbied for modifications in a bill (HR 4245) which prescribed a formula for taxing the income of insurance companies. President Eisenhower signed that bill into law (PL 86-69) on June 25. (For details, see story p. 203)

Spending by Groups

Congressional Quarterly divides lobby registrants into six groups which reflect general legislative interests. During the first half of the year, 136 groups engaged in business or the promotion of business interests reported spending $855,117.23. The second top spender in business next to the Mutual Life Insurance Companies was the American Steamship Committee on Conference Studies which reported spending $54,563.88. The Southern States Industrial Council was third on the list reporting $51,698.08. (For complete list, see p. 684)

Other CQ lobby categories include citizen groups, employee and labor organizations, farm lobbies, professional organizations and military and veterans groups.

Employee and labor organizations were the second heaviest spending group, reporting $396,265.25. Heading the list of labor organizations was the AFL-CIO which reported $65,604.69. For the first quarter of 1959, the AFL-CIO led the top spender list with $34,514.59.

Of the 38 citizen organizations reporting the first half of 1959, the top spender was the National Housing Conference which reported expenditures of $38,174.90. The National Education Assn. of the United States, Division of Legislation and Federal Relations, the third heaviest spender during the first six months of the year, led the professional groups with reported expenditures of $56,312.97.

Leading the seven military and veterans organizations was the American Legion reporting $32,942.98. The American Farm Bureau Federation, which reported spending $49,611.00, led the list of farm lobbies.

Pressure groups which have registered under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 are required under this law to file quarterly expenditure reports with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

The 1946 Act did not establish an agency to administer the law, so that investigations of violations must be made by the Justice Department.

Top Spenders

The 19 heaviest-spending lobby organizations for the first half of 1959 are listed below. They are listed with figures for the first six months of 1959 and the total expenditure for 1958. Some groups in reporting lobby spending include everything from office rent to secretaries' salaries while others put down only what they consider went for actual lobbying.

249 LOBBY GROUPS LIST SPENDING FOR FIRST HALF OF 1959

Following is a list of 249 lobby groups and the amounts which each reported spending in the first half of 1959 for lobby activities. The organizations are divided alphabetically into six categories: Business, Citizens, Employee and Labor, Farm, Military and Veterans and Professional. The deadline for second quarter spending reports was July 10, but this list includes reports filed as late as Aug. 10. Groups which had not filed spending reports since 1958 are not included.

Law on Spending Reports

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires spending reports to be filed quarterly by anybody who "directly or indirectly, solicits, collects or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes: (a) the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S.; (b) to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the U.S." A Supreme Court decision in 1954 (U.S. v Harris, 347 US 612) in effect limited the law's applicability to "direct communications with Members of Congress."

The Act's vagueness on what constitutes lobby spending permits pressure groups to decide for themselves what they shall report as lobby expenditures. The Act specifies that all registered organizations file financial reports by the tenth day of the month following the end of the quarter.

CQ Fact Sheet On Former Congressmen

77 EX-CONGRESSMEN HAVE REGISTERED AS LOBBYISTS

A powerful faction among Washington lobbyists is the small number of ex-Members of Congress who make their living by trying to influence their old colleagues.

A Congressional Quarterly survey of the reports filed with Congress under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act showed that 13 Senators and 64 former Representatives registered as paid lobbyists between the law's enactment in 1946 and Sept. 15, 1959.

How many of them were still active, however, was difficult to determine. The lobby law made no provision to enable a lobbyist, once he was registered, to withdraw his registration or to indicate that he was no longer actively engaged in the business of pressuring Congress.

The law did require lobbyists to file financial reports every three months covering their legislative activities during the preceding quarter. From these reports and other sources, Congressional Quarterly found that at least three ex-Senators and 19 ex-Representatives were still on the legislative scene in 1959. Of these, 17 filed financial reports through Sept. 15, 1959. The actual number of active ex-Members could be higher; the lobby law had no effective enforcement provision and experience has shown that many of the registrants do not observe reporting deadlines.

Experience Helps

As might be expected, a former Member of Congress has several advantages over the average Washington lobbyist in the competition to influence votes.

First, an ex-Member, by virtue of his service in Congress, has a greater understanding of the complex legislative machinery than his competitors. He has participated in the give-and-take of closed-door committee sessions and he has an accurate conception of how most legislation is hammered out.

In addition, he knows the fine points of parliamentary procedure, enabling him to anticipate and interpret the subtle maneuvers of floor leaders and party whips that often determine the outcome of a crucial debate.

Also to the advantage of the Congressman-turned-lobbyist is the respect and courtesy that Congress traditionally accords its former Members. The average lobbyist might struggle for weeks to get to see an exceptionally busy committee chairman, but the former Congressman probably would receive immediate attention.

Floor Privilege Waived

One of the privileges available to ex-Members apparently is not used for lobbying purposes. Under the Standing Rules of the House and Senate, all former Members are granted access to the floors of their respective chambers. Obviously, if this privilege were used to try to influence Members' votes, it might be an extremely effective weapon for the lobbyist. But it certainly would also be deeply resented as unfair and improper. For this reason the use, or abuse, of the privilege is carefully avoided by most ex-Congressmen.

How Successful?

It is difficult to measure the effectiveness of any group of lobbyists, including those who have previously served in Congress. It would appear that the ex-Congressmen would be more adept at actually influencing legislation, and, therefore, would be better paid for their efforts, but the vagueness of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act prevents an accurate appraisal. The law requires lobbyists to submit financial reports covering their expenditures and receipts for legislative activities, but permits the lobbyists to determine for themselves how much of their expenses go directly for influencing legislation and how much of their salaries or retainers are paid expressly for their lobbying talents.

Some reports list as expenses everything from telephone calls to office expenses; others list only cab fare to Capitol Hill. Some lobbyists list their total earnings as receipts; others list only the money received for a few hours spent in direct contact with a Member of Congress.

Two former Congressmen, since leaving Capitol Hill, have become top executives of lobby groups. Ex-Rep. Jerry Voorhis (D Calif. 1937-47) currently is the executive director of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. and ex-Rep. Clyde T. Ellis (D Ark. 1939-43) has been the general manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Assn. since 1955. Voorhis had not filed a 1959 financial report by Sept. 15; in 1958 he reported receiving a total of $300. Ellis' latest report, covering the first half of 1959, listed receipts of $150.93.

Other former Congressmen representing lobby groups in Washington: ex-Rep. Robert R. Hale (R Maine 1942-59), representing the Assn. for the Advancement of Science; ex-Rep. DeWitt S. Hyde (R Md. 1953-59), representing the Laundry and Dry Cleaners' Assn. of the District of Columbia; ex-Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis. 1945-47, 1949-51), AFL-CIO, who reported $7,530 through Sept. 15; ex-Rep. Laurie C. Battle (D Ala. 1947-54), who reported a salary of $1,000 quarterly from the National Assn. of Manufacturers; ex-Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md. 1947-53), representing the American Merchant Marine Institute, who reported a salary of $3,125 quarterly or $12,500 a year; ex-Rep. James P. Richards (D S.C. 1933-57), who as president of the Tobacco Institute Inc. reported receiving $505 during the first half of 1959 for his legislative activities; and ex-Rep. Albert M. Cole (R Kan. 1945-53), representing the California Savings and Loan League.

In addition to the above, the following filed lobbying reports in 1959: ex-Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R Minn. 1940-49) for the American Steamship Committee on Conference Studies; ex-Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill. 1939-51) for the American Finance Conference, the Western National Life Insurance Co. of Texas and the Western Medical Corp.;

ex-Rep. Lyle H. Boren (D Okla. 1937-47) for the Assn. of Western Railways; ex-Rep. Henderson H. Carson (R Ohio 1943-45) for the East Ohio Gas Co.; ex-Rep. Albert E. Carter (R Calif. 1925-45) for the Pacific Gas and Electric Co.; ex-Rep. Aaron L. Ford (D Miss. 1935-43) for a private citizen; ex-Rep. Fritz G. Lanham (D Texas 1919-47) for the American Fair Trade Council Inc., the National Patent Council and the Trinity River Improvement Assn.; ex-Rep. Carter Manasco (D Ala. 1941-49) for National Business Publications and the National Coal Assn.; ex-Rep. Harold G. Mosier (D Ohio 1937-39) for the Aerospace Industries Assn. of America; ex-Rep. J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla. 1933-51) for the Florida Citrus Mutual, the West Coast (Fla.) Inland Navigation District and a group of Florida individuals; ex-Rep. Ken M. Regan (D Texas 1947-55) for 19 Texas railroads; ex-Rep. Frank L. Sundstrom (R N.J. 1943-49) for Schenley Industries Inc.; and ex-Rep. Patrick J. Hillings (R Calif. 1951-59) for the California Portland Cement Co. Regan died Aug. 15.

Two sitting Senators, Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), also joined the lobbying ranks temporarily during breaks in their Congressional service. O'Mahoney, who served in the Senate from 1934-53, represented the Upper Missouri Development Assn. in 1953 for a retainer fee of $1,000 for two months and North American Airlines, also in 1953, for a retainer fee of $5,000 and compensation "based on merit basis." O'Mahoney returned to the Senate in 1955. Ervin, who served in the House in 1946-47, later in 1947 registered for the Southern Railway Co., a group he represented as trial attorney. Ervin told CQ he received no compensation for his service as lobbyist and only appeared in Washington for one day. "For my 24 hours of lobbying," he said, "it took me five years to convince the Justice Department that I was not doing it permanently for a living." He was elected to the Senate in 1954.

Ex-Sen. Danaher and Ex-Rep. Hyde, since their registrations, have been appointed Federal judges.

CQ Fact Sheet On Lobby Registrations

364 NEW LOBBYISTS BRING 14-YEAR TOTAL TO 5,507

The first session of the 86th Congress saw an upsurge in the number of registered lobbyists.

From Jan. 1 through Sept. 15, 364 individuals and organizations registered with Congress as lobbyists under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. This compared with a total of 337 registrations filed during all of 1958. The 1957 figure was 392.

As of Sept. 15, the over-all total of registrations filed under the Lobby Act since its enactment in 1946 stood at 5,507. The Act requires that all persons seeking to influence the passage or defeat of legislation, directly or indirectly, register with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. It does not require that a lobbyist withdraw his registration when his lobbying ceases.

Many of the lobbyists included in this total have registered two or more times, usually each time they are employed by a different organization. The total of 5,507 registrations filed during the 14-year history of the Lobby Act actually represents only 3,932 different lobbyists and pressure groups. Of the 364 registrations filed during 1959, only 220 were from persons and groups who had never registered before. (See pages that follow)

Of the 3,932 unduplicated registrations, 3,315 were from individuals, 186 from law and public relations firms and 431 were from organizations. The 220 new registrations in 1959 included 174 individuals, 10 law and public relations firms and 36 organizations.

Legislative Interests

All types of organizations registered in 1959. They ranged from the Antique and Art Dealers' Assn. of New York to the Yakima Indian Assn. of Washington State. The art dealers said they would oppose a bill (S 948) amending the tariff laws by permitting art objects more than 100 years old to be imported duty-free. The Yakima Indians hired a Washington lawyer, Albert A. Grorud, to back a bill to restore the right of an Indian to inherit family possessions after he leaves a tribal reservation. Current law provides that an Indian would be disinherited and stricken from the tribal membership rolls if he left his reservation. Grorud said he would receive $25 a month.

Lobbying in 1959 was not confined to domestic issues alone. Among groups outside the U.S. employing registered lobbyists were Camara Minera de Mexico and the Republic of China. The Mexican group was represented by the law firm of Chapman, Wolfsohn and Friedman, headed by Oscar L. Chapman, former Secretary of the Interior (1949-53). It was interested in fluorspar legislation.

The government of Red China was represented briefly by a Washington attorney, Harold R. Robinson. Robinson told CQ that he notified the Clerk of the House shortly after his registration that he was no longer an active lobbyist. He declined to state his legislative goal.

One of the most widely publicized lobby campaigns of 1959 was launched in January by David Burpee, head of the Burpee Seed Co. of Doylestown, Pa. Burpee registered Jan. 14, listing as his legislative interest a resolution designating the marigold as the U.S. national flower.

Registration Totals

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 requires the registration of all persons attempting to influence Federal legislation. The year-by-year breakdown of all registrations (including duplications) since the law was enacted:

Year	Registrations	Year	Registrations
1946*	222	1953	296

Congress was subjected to pressure from an unexpected source when the Federation of Homemakers registered in July. The housewives said they would try to persuade Congress to appropriate more money for a new Food and Drug Administration building.

The railroad labor unions stepped up their drive in 1959 for higher pensions and retirement benefits. In all, 25 registrations were filed by nine different unions and brotherhoods. The same nine filed only 14 registrations in 1958. A measure passed by Congress and signed by the President (HR 5610-PL 28) boosted pensions, annuities and survivor benefits by 10 percent.

The life insurance industry was well represented while Congress considered a bill (HR 4245) establishing a permanent formula for taxing life insurance profits. By the time the tax bill became law June 25 (PL 69), 16 registrations had been filed by various groups.

Ex-Congressmen

There was a big increase in 1959 in the number of former Members of Congress being employed as lobbyists. Only four ex-Congressmen registered in 1958, but in 1959 12 registered, seven for the first time. The seven:

Ex-Rep. Laurie C. Battle (D Ala. 1947-54) for the National Assn. of Manufacturers; ex-Rep. Ken. M. Regan (D Texas 1947-55) for several Texas railroads; ex-Rep. DeWitt S. Hyde (R Md. 1953-59) for the Laundry and Dry Cleaners Assn. of D.C.; ex-Rep. James P. Richards (D S.C. 1933-57) for the Tobacco Institute; ex-Rep. Albert M. Cole (R Kan. 1945-53) for the California Savings and Loan League; ex-Rep. Robert Hale (R Maine 1942-59) for the Assn. for the Advancement of Science and ex-Rep. Patrick J. Hillings (R Calif. 1951-59) for the California Portland Cement Co. (For more on ex-Congressmen lobbyists, see p. 687.)

Registrations by Lobbyists

According to official records, 337 persons and organizations filed lobby registrations in 1958 and 364 more filed between Jan. 1 and Sept. 15, 1959 -- the date the first session of the 86th Congress adjourned.

The 1958 total was the third lowest since 1947, the first full year for which the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act was in effect (see box, previous page).

Names of persons and organizations who filed lobby registrations in the second session of the 85th Congress -- Jan. 7-Aug. 24, 1958 -- appear in the 1958 Almanac, p. 631. Those who filed after the second session adjourned appear below, with the registrations of those who filed during the 1959 session of the 86th Congress.

CQ Fact Sheet On Committee Investigations

COMMITTEES AUTHORIZED TO SPEND ALMOST $9 MILLION

At the close of its first session, the 86th Congress had authorized almost three-quarters as much for Committee investigations as the 85th Congress allotted during its two years. By Sept. 15, a total of 38 standing, select and special House and Senate Committees had been allotted $8,797,000 for probe spending. During the 85th Congress, 39 Committees received $12,109,090.28; authorizations during the 1st session of the 85th Congress totaled $6,137,840.28. The chart on page 718 shows actual and authorized investigations spending for the 85th and 86th Congresses. Major probes undertaken by the close of session are listed beginning on page 719.

House Committees were authorized $3,592,000 in 1959 compared to $2,894,500 at the close of the first session of the 85th Congress. Senate Committees received $5,205,000, whereas in 1957 they had received $3,243,340.28. Adding to the 86th Congress Senate totals were two temporary committees with investigating authority created in 1959. The Select Water Resources Committee, established April 20, was authorized to spend $175,000 and the Special Unemployment Problems Committee, established Sept. 12, was allotted $100,000.

All of the standing committees of the Senate, as well as the Select Small Business Committee, automatically receive $10,000 each Congress under section 134(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Not all of this money is used for investigations but it may be used for that purpose. The CQ tables include this figure as well as additional authorizations received by special resolution.

In addition, some Senate committees have available for all or part of a Congress funds authorized but unspent by the preceding Congress. (Prior to 1957, CQ included Senate carryover funds as well as authorizations for Senate and House Appropriations Committees in its tabulation of money authorized for investigations.)

All House funds result from resolutions as the House has no automatic spending authority for committee investigations.

Spending Figures

Although rapidly approaching the 85th Congress' record committee appropriations, the 86th has far to go to catch up to its predecessor in spending. According to spending reports filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, as of June 30, Senate Committees had spent $1,712,704.23 or 33 percent of the money appropriated to them by the end of the session. House Committees reported spending $862,018.14 or 24 percent of their final appropriations. By the end of the 85th Congress, Senate Committees had spent 78 percent and House Committees 86 percent of their allotted funds. Money which has not been spent within the designated period reverts to the U.S. Treasury.

Committees receiving and spending most and least follow the pattern of recent years. The Judiciary Committee received and spent more than any other Senate Committee. It was allotted $1,552,500 and spent $542,994.51. The Judiciary Committee and its Subcommittees had held 15 major investigations by the end of the first session. In the House the Government Operations Committee was the leader in Committee funds received and spent; it was allotted $640,000 and spent $227,106.65. It had conducted 12 investigations as of Sept. 15.

In both Houses, the District of Columbia Committee received least and spent least. In the House the D.C. Committee was authorized to spend $10,000 of which it had spent $174 as of June 30. In the Senate the District Committee, the Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee and the Finance Committee asked for no more money than the automatic $10,000 allotment. The Senate D.C. Committee spent $1,137.70.

Not included in the chart of the totals are Joint Committees and Appropriations Committees whose funds are allotted on a fiscal year basis.

Investigations funds for the Senate and House Appropriations Committees are earmarked in the annual legislative appropriations bills. Congress allotted the Senate Appropriations Committee $380,000 and the House Committee $500,000 for probe expenses in fiscal 1960. These were the same amounts the Committees received for fiscal 1959.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported spending $33,496.69 between Jan. 1 and June 30, 1959. The House Appropriations Committee said it spent $206,327.40 during the same period.

Two Joint Committees received probe funds from the 86th Congress through concurrent resolutions rather than in fiscal appropriations bills. The Joint Committee on Metropolitan Washington Problems got a total of $55,000 through Jan. 31, 1960. The Joint Economic Committee, in addition to funds received through the Legislative Appropriations Act, got $200,000 for a special study of current economic problems.

Five Joint Committees with essentially investigative functions were given $561,745 for use on all committee expenses in fiscal 1960. The spending was authorized in the fiscal 1960 Legislative Appropriations Act and the Defense Production Act extension of 1958.

Money allotted to the Committees:

Joint Committee	Fiscal 1960	Fiscal 1958-59
Defense Production	$ 65,000	$130,000
Economic	156,950	299,720
Immigration and Nationality Policy	20,000	40,000
Internal Revenue Taxation	295,000	470,000
Reduction of Non-Essential Federal Expenditures	24,795	45,000

In addition Congress set aside $250,145 for the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy which handles legislative as well as investigative work. The Joint Committee received $467,905 in fiscal 1958-59.

Joint Committees do not file spending reports.

Committee spending can be divided roughly into routine and investigating expenses. Precise segregation of committees' investigative activities and expenses is virtually impossible since the same staff employees often work on both legislation and investigations.

Routine expenditures include staff salaries, stamps, stationery, purchases of publications, official travel expenses, per diem allowances, meetings and hearings expenses in connection with legislative work. Regular Committee staffs are limited by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 to four professional and six clerical members. Their salaries are not included in reports of spending under special resolution.

Routine expenditures are provided for by the automatic $10,000 received by each Senate Committee, by special resolutions in the case of House Committees and by various separate provisions in the annual Legislative Appropriations Act. The Act of 1959 appropriated the following for routine Committee expenses: for the staffs of standing Senate Committees and the Small Business Committee, $2,372,960; for House Committee employees, $2,750,000; for official reporters for House Committees, $190,145; for stenographic reports of House Committee hearings, $150,000. In addition, Senate Committees shared a $13,200 fund for stationery with officers of the Senate and House Committees were allotted stationery and postage in miscellaneous and stamp funds.

Money for investigations expenditures come from special resolutions introduced by the individual Committees. In the Senate a single resolution authorizes both the investigations and the funds to finance it. In the House two separate resolutions, the first authorizing the investigation and passing through the Rules Committee, the second appropriating funds and passing through the House Administration Committee, must be approved.

Resolutions authorizing investigations specifically empower Committees to hire additional personnel. Reports on investigations resolutions published by the Senate Rules and Administration Committee show that the great bulk of probe spending is for staff salaries. A spokesman for the House Administration Committee said the same was true of House probe funds. The remainder of the money spent on investigations is used for travel and field study expenses, hearings expenses, witnesses' travel and per diem, stationery and office supplies, communications, etc. House resolutions stipulate the amount of foreign traveling which can be done with the funds appropriated.

Money authorized for House Committee spending is available for the duration of an entire Congress. It is the policy of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, through which Senate Committee requests for funds must pass, that investigation funds be available only until one month beyond the calendar year during which they were authorized. Senate Committees working on studies which have not been completed must therefore apply for additional money for use after Jan. 31. Only resolutions for funds to supplement the automatic $10,000 covering routine expenses authorize spending throughout an entire Congress.

Resolutions appropriating money for committee probes in both chambers specify that the money shall come from the contingent funds of the respective chambers. In the Senate, money is drawn from an "Inquiries and Investigations" item in the Legislative Appropriations Act. The Act of fiscal 1960 allotted $3,550,000 for this fund. The $10,000 each Senate Committee automatically receives and a specified $380,000 for the Appropriations Committee also come from this fund. Although Senate Committees were authorized to spend a much larger $5,205,000, including the $10,000 apiece, since the beginning of the 86th Congress, the fund would meet all probe expenses since it covered only the period from the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, 1959, to the expiration of the authorizations, Jan. 31, 1960. If the fund did run short, supplemental appropriations would be made.

The House section of the fiscal 1960 Legislative Appropriations Act set aside $2,450,000 under "Select and Special Committees." Bearing a traditional, and inaccurate, name, this item contains the money from which funds are drawn when a resolution authorizes a House Committee to take money for probe purposes. A spokesman for the House Appropriations Committee told CQ that the sum was a "drawing account," and "educated guess" as to the amount needed to cover House investigations during fiscal 1960.

How Probes Start

Committee investigations take up much of the time of the Congress and the amount of money spent for probes grows with each Congress. How does a probe begin and what is the result when an investigation is concluded?

Inquiries which do not grow from a committee's responsibility in legislative matters may originate in a number of ways. The Senate or House itself may decide that an area needs inspection and either establish a special committee to do the job or give the responsibility to a standing Committee. Sometimes a full committee or subcommittee will decide to look into a matter and may ask its house for the authority and funds to do so. Newspaper articles, letters from individuals, groups or businesses, reports from government agencies may cause a legislator or a committee to initiate a probe.

As for the results, a Committee is often charged in the resolution authorizing the investigation to report its findings back to the parent house, sometimes with suggestions for corrective legislation. In other cases the publicity attendant on the probe or a written report by the Committee will stimulate those with responsibility for the investigated area to correct whatever unsatisfactory conditions gave rise to the investigation. A staff member of the House Government Operations Committee told CQ that Committee investigations into the operations of Government agencies and departments often result in improvement in inefficient and uneconomic conditions. The Government bodies take suggestions made by the Committee in its reports, he said, making legislation unnecessary.

Usually there is some written record of the findings of a probe, whether a compilation of the opinions of experts gathered by the Committee, the transcript of hearings, the findings of the staff themselves recorded as a committee print of a report or, in the most publicized investigations, the record of the hearings and attendant developments as reported by the press.

MAJOR INVESTIGATIONS UNDERTAKEN BY 86th CONGRESS

Following is a list of major investigations undertaken by Congressional committees from the beginning of the 86th Congress, Jan. 7, 1959 through Sept. 15, 1959. Some also were the subject of investigation by the 85th Congress. (1958 Almanac p. 664)

Each inquiry is listed by subject under the committee and subcommittee that conducted it. The list shows when hearings started and ended and gives report numbers where applicable.

Hearings on bills and resolutions are excluded. Only investigations in which committee hearings were held are listed. Staff studies that did not reach the hearing stage are omitted.

No investigations are listed for the Senate and House Appropriations Committees whose staffs conduct continuing studies on appropriations, operations of executive departments and disposition of Government funds.

What's a Probe?

For purposes of this survey, Congressional Quarterly defined "investigation" as an inquiry by any Congressional committee or subcommittee that used investigative procedures (examining records, summoning and questioning witnesses) for one or more of the following reasons:

- Fact-finding for possible special and remedial legislation.
- Fulfillment of Congress' function as "watchdog" over operation of the Government and its programs.
- Informing the public.
- Resolving questions concerning membership or procedure, such as conduct of elections or fitness of Members of Congress.

Among committee activities not included in the definition: Inquiries conducted by committee staff members without participation by Members of Congress in formal hearings; routine hearings, and action on bills and resolutions.

Status of the over-all mobilization programs. One day, 8/18/59.

CONTEMPT CITATIONS

Congress in 1959 adopted only two citations for contempt of Congress, both recommended by the House Un-American Activities Committee. The House Sept. 3, by voice vote, adopted resolutions (H Res 374 -- H Rept 1135; H Res 375 -- H Rept 1136) citing Martin Popper and Edwin A. Alexander for contempt. Neither had invoked the Fifth Amendment: Popper, during a June 5 subcommittee hearing on passport controls, had questioned the subcommittee's jurisdiction and the pertinency of a question as to whether he was a Communist party member when he applied for a passport; Alexander, during a May 6 hearing in Chicago, said he was a former Communist and described his activities but refused to name former Communist associates on grounds of conscience.

In addition to the 1959 citations, three other citations were approved in December 1958. Since Congress was not in session when the contempt recommendations were voted by Senate and House committees, they were sent directly to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, respectively, for certification and then transmitted to the U.S. attorney. The citations:

William Presser, Teamsters Union official -- cited Dec. 19, 1958 by the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field for failure to produce personal and union records under subpena and for refusal Sept. 17 to answer questions about the records.

Harvey O'Connor, national chairman of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, and Donald Wheeldin -- cited Dec. 22, 1958 by the Un-American Activities Committee for refusal to comply with subpenas. The Committee said Wheeldin failed to testify Sept. 2 in Los Angeles, O'Connor Sept. 5 in Newark, N.J.

SUPREME COURT RULING

The Supreme Court in 1959 backtracked slightly from its 1957 Watkins case ruling, in which it criticized the "excessively broad" resolution that authorized the Un-American Activities Committee. (1957 Almanac p. 661)

In a 5-4 decision June 8 upholding the contempt conviction of Lloyd Barenblatt, the Court majority granted the "vagueness" of House Rule 11, which created the Un-American Activities Committee, but said "we may not read it in isolation from its long history in the House." The Court said that in its Watkins ruling it was not dealing with Rule 11 "at large" when it discussed limitations on Congressional committee activities. "So long as Congress acts in pursuance of its constitutional power, the judiciary lacks authority to intervene on the basis of the motives which spurred the exercise of that power," it said, adding: "The proper meaning of an authorization to a Congressional committee is not to be derived alone from its abstract terms unrelated to the definite content furnished them by the course of Congressional actions." "It can hardly be seriously argued," the opinion said, "that the investigation of Communist activities generally...was beyond the purview of the Committee's intended authority under Rule 11."

A four-man minority said the Court failed to see "that exposure and punishment is the aim of this Committee and the reason for its existence." It said Rule 11 was "too broad" to support any conviction for refusal to testify and that "if Congress wants ideas investigated...it must be prepared to say so expressly and unequivocally."

INFLATION CURBS

As the Nation emerged from the 1957-58 recession, debate over United States fiscal policy centered once more on the problems of inflation.

President Eisenhower still contended, as he had throughout the recession, that inflation was the greatest danger facing the country and that price stability was an essential national goal. Many Democrats, however, disputed this view, arguing that a faster rate of economic growth should be a primary aim of the Government and that inflation was a secondary problem.

The Administration, rejecting direct Government price and wage controls as weapons, in 1959 put the chief burden of the anti-inflation war on Congress and labor, urging the former to accept a balanced Federal budget and the latter to curb demands for wage increases. The public was told to shop carefully and business to fight cost increases. The Administration took its case to the Nation through the newly created Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Congressional Democrats argued for a relaxation of credit restraints and other steps to encourage a faster rate of economic growth. A Democratic-sponsored study of "employment, growth and price levels" by the Joint Economic Committee was expected to provide ammunition for the Democratic campaign in 1960.

Only one major legislative proposal in the field made any headway in 1959. A House committee reported a bill empowering the President to hold public hearings when price or wage increases threatened to have an inflationary impact. No further action was taken on the measure.

The fiscal debate was heightened by the nationwide steel strike, which began July 15. One issue in the steel contract negotiations was the question of whether any wage increase would be inflationary, as steel management insisted. Despite the fact-finding activities of Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, and later of a special panel set up under the Taft-Hartley Act, the question was never finally resolved, and the steelworkers returned to work in November under an 80-day "cooling-off" injunction.

Meanwhile, the consumer price index continued to rise, reaching an all-time high of 125.5 percent of the 1947-49 average in October 1959 -- 1.5 percent higher than in October 1958. Indications were that the problem of inflation would play a major role in the 1960 election campaign.

These were the highlights of the 1959 fiscal debate:

Economic Report

President Eisenhower's 1959 Economic Report, transmitted to Congress Jan. 20, warned against the dangers of an incipiently disastrous inflation.

The "most important single step" in meeting the Government's responsibility for helping to stabilize prices, the report said, would be "acceptance by the Congress of the expenditure level of the 1960 budget." In the private economy, consumers were asked to contribute to price stability by "shopping carefully," while businessmen were told "they must wage a ceaseless war against costs." But, the report said, "leaders of labor unions, in view of the great power lodged in their hands, have a particularly critical role to play" in the battle against inflation. That role, the report indicated, was to forego efforts to raise wages and fringe benefits that were "not justified by productivity performance." (For text of President's transmittal letter, see p. 649)

Although the report said the public had a "vital interest" in wage contracts, nothing approaching direct Government interference in labor-management negotiations was proposed. What the report did propose was a program apparently designed to enlist public support for Administration views on the causes of, and remedies for, inflation. Four steps were suggested:

- Congress was asked to amend the Employment Act of 1946 "to make reasonable price stability an explicit goal of Federal economic policy, coordinate with the goals of maximum production, employment and purchasing power now specified." This step, the report said, would "help build a public opinion favorable to the adoption and vigorous application of needed measures."
- Establishment of a Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth to seek ways "to build a better public understanding of the need for reasonable price stability in a free society and of the conditions necessary to achieve this objective." (See next page)
- Establishment of a Committee on Government Activities Affecting Prices and Costs to keep an eye on programs involving procurement, construction, stockpiling and commodity price supports. Dr. Raymond J. Saulnier, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Jan. 23 was named to head this group.
- The Bureau of the Budget would "accelerate programs for enlargement and improvement of public information of prices, wages and related costs, and productivity."

Committee Report

The Joint Economic Committee Jan. 20-Feb. 10 held hearings on the President's Economic Report, but little that the Committee heard established any common ground between opposing schools of thought on the key economic issues -- the rate of growth, inflation and its causes, Government spending and tax policies.

The Administration's position, stated Feb. 5 by Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson, that inflation was the principal enemy and a balanced budget the chief guardian of the Nation's economy, was endorsed Feb. 6 by William McChesney Martin Jr., chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Although the current price level was stable, he said, "there is inflammatory material lying around for a serious increase" in prices. Martin's view was challenged by Seymour E. Harris of Harvard, who said the Reserve Board's concern with inflation had helped to bring on the 1957-58 recession.

Spokesmen for business and labor groups, testifying Feb. 9, revealed equally wide differences of view. Walter P. Reuther, president of United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO), said Soviet economic growth "is advancing four or five times as fast" as that of the U.S. because of the Administration's "faulty economic policies." He called for a higher minimum wage and a depressed areas program, implying that increased Federal spending would help to raise the economy's rate of growth to a "normal" 5 percent. Walter Fackler, speaking for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., disputed Reuther's view of Soviet progress. Both Fackler and Dr. Ralph Robey, appearing for the National Assn. of Manufacturers, urged that Federal spending be cut and that taxes be revamped.

Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas), vice chairman of the Committee, Feb. 10 disclosed results of a poll of 615 economists conducted in 1958. Asked to assign priorities to certain economic goals, 53 percent selected maximum employment as the key goal, while only 18 percent voted for price stability. However, almost three-quarters of the economists believed it possible to achieve both goals simultaneously over the long run.

The Joint Committee March 9 issued its report (S Rept 98) on the President's Economic Report, with members splitting sharply along party lines.

MAJORITY VIEWS

The Democratic majority led off with the assertion that "a more rapid rate of expansion of production and employment is attainable in 1959 than is suggested in the estimates of the actual results for the year" offered by Government witnesses and implied in the budget and Economic Report. To achieve this higher rate, the majority agreed, greater emphasis should be placed on stimulating production and employment than on stabilizing prices -- a direct challenge to the Administration's view of inflation as the chief threat to the economy.

Basic points were then elaborated as follows:

- ECONOMIC GROWTH -- "Major emphasis in public policy should also be placed on establishing the conditions for achieving and maintaining a higher rate of growth in total output and productivity than has been realized in recent years." The Soviets were not alone in moving ahead of the U.S. in rate of growth; the nations of Western Europe "have progressed much more rapidly in their growth rates than the United States since 1953."
- MONETARY POLICY -- "The limited expansion of the money supply (since 1954) reflects the efforts on the part of the monetary authorities to check inflationary price developments. Whatever the appropriateness of monetary and credit restraint in the period 1955-57, there appears to be little occasion in 1959 for comparable severity. On the contrary, a rigid continuation of the present degree of restraint may well increase materially the difficulties in achieving prompt and full economic recovery."
- TAX REFORM -- Endorsing "a start now on constructive reform of the Federal tax system," the majority also seconded the President's request for another year's postponement in scheduled reductions of the corporate income and certain excise tax rates. It added, however, that "a good case can be made for the repeal or reduction of a number of specific excise taxes."
- PRESIDENT'S BUDGET -- The balance of $77 billion struck by the President was of less importance, in the majority's view, than the proper discharge of Federal responsibilities at home and abroad. "The budget can be revised and the list of priorities changed by the Congress. Sound budget policy may well call for expanding some Federal activities and contracting others, and this should not be labeled fiscal irresponsibility."

MINORITY VIEWS

The Republican minority deplored the "partisan political tone" of the majority report. Its principal economic criticism, however, was directed at the report's de-emphasis of price stability and the dangers of inflation. Saying that one of the Government's most important contributions to economic growth would be "to stop the continuing erosion of the value of our money," the minority said:

"Stabilizing the price level and insuring the soundness of the dollar, therefore, is not an alternative objective to achieving a high rate of economic growth. On the contrary, it is a basic requisite for continuing growth without violent swings in the level of employment in a free economy."

The minority then took issue with the report's "cursory and confused treatment of the broad problems of fiscal and monetary policy," and with most of its discussion of specific areas of legislation. The Republicans concluded by endorsing the President's program, as set forth in the Economic Report.

In a set of "additional views" Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) made it clear that he was as much in agreement with the Democrats on some points, as with his fellow Republicans on others. There was evidence of dissent within the majority, as well: Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) objected to the report's "blanket conclusions" respecting the specifics of legislation.

Cabinet Committee

President Eisenhower Jan. 31 named Vice President Nixon to head the new Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth, plans for which he announced in his Economic Report. Named to serve with Nixon on the committee were the Secretaries of the Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, the Postmaster General and the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Allen Wallis, dean of the University of Chicago School of Business, March 18 was sworn in as executive director of the group.

The Cabinet Committee during the year issued four "informational" reports, which were characterized by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) as "press releases of a propagandistic nature" and "a collection of bromides." Douglas, chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, Sept. 23 criticized the Nixon group's failure to hold hearings and conduct lengthy investigations, as his own Committee was doing. (See below)

Highlights of the Cabinet Committee reports:

- June 29 -- The committee's first report was largely a restatement of Administration views previously set forth in the Economic Report. The committee categorically rejected price and wage controls as a method of controling inflation, saying they "would do more harm than any amount of inflation that we have ever experienced or are likely to experience in peacetime."
- Aug. 17 -- In a report entitled "What Do We Really Want From Our Economy?", the committee made no specific recommendations but listed as primary economic aims economic growth, maximum employment opportunities and "reasonable stability of the price level."
- Sept. 6 -- In a report entitled "The Record on Prices," the committee called for strong Government efforts to combat inflation but again made no specific recommendations. Reviewing the movement of the general price level since the American Revolution, it said that "perhaps the greatest difference between the past quarter century and our previous history is that wartime price rises seem to have become permanent."
- Oct. 25 -- In a report entitled "Managing Our Money, Our Budget and Our Debt to Promote Prosperity with Stable Prices," the committee said the Government's power to achieve "economic stability" by use of budget policy, monetary policy and debt management "is seriously compromised if arbitrary or inappropriate restraints are placed on their operation."

CITIZENS' CAMPAIGN

In line with the Cabinet Committee's approach, a "Citizens' Campaign Against Inflation" was launched in Washington Nov. 2 as the leaders of 48 national organizations met with President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon to discuss ways to protect the value of the dollar.

In a breakfast meeting, the President told the representatives of business, industrial and financial interests that the self-discipline necessary to control inflation could be achieved only by enlightened public opinion. He said that "telegrams, letters and phone calls coming in by the millions" could do much to influence Congress, the Executive Branch and the entire Government to do "the right thing."

The one-day economic conference was organized by H. Bruce Palmer, president of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. of Newark, N.J. A feature of the anti-inflation campaign, Palmer said, would be the distribution of pledges to millions of individuals. Signers of the pledges would promise to support and promote sound fiscal policies, to save more money to finance economic growth and to increase their own productivity by working harder.

Palmer said he hoped that 10 to 15 million signed pledges would be collected from individual citizens.

Among the organizations endorsing the anti-inflation campaign were the following:

American Retail Federation, U.S. Savings and Loan League, U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce, General Federation of Women's Clubs, American Life Convention, Investment Bankers Assn., American Assn. of Life Underwriters, National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Grange, National Education Assn., National Assn. of Life Underwriters and Disabled American Veterans.

Palmer said that George Meany, AFL-CIO president, and other union officials had been invited but said they were unable to attend.

1959 Congressional Activities

While the Nixon Committee carried on its "information" campaign against inflation, Democrats in Congress were seeking other approaches to the solution of economic problems.

The Joint Economic Committee under the chairmanship of Sen. Douglas, himself an economist, launched a wide-ranging, "impartial" study of the problems of providing maximum employment and an adequate rate of economic growth, as well as maintaining price stability and preventing inflation. The $200,000 inquiry, first suggested by Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) Dec. 11, 1958, was authorized by the Senate and House March 23. Throughout the remainder of the year the Committee held intermittent hearings. It was scheduled to issue its report early in 1960.

Meanwhile, the Senate Judiciary Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), reopened its investigation of "administered price inflation." The Subcommittee explored administered pricing in the bread, insurance and drug industries, but its 1959 hearings were less spectacular than its earlier headline investigations of the steel and auto industries. (1958 Almanac p. 704)

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

A variety of general economic legislation was presented to Congress in 1959, but no measure received final approval.

● PRICE STABILITY -- President Eisenhower's proposal that the goal of price stability be added to the existing objectives of "maximum employment, production and purchasing power" under the Employment Act of 1946 received no action. The proposal had widespread business backing but was opposed by labor spokesmen as a barrier to the goal of full employment.

● CLARK-REUSS BILL -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) introduced identical bills in 1959 to amend the Employment Act "to bring to bear an informed public opinion upon price and wage increases which threaten economic stability." HR 6263 was reported by the House Government Operations Committee June 12 (H Rept 539); S 1237 still was pending before a Senate Banking and Currency subcommittee when the session ended.

The bill directed the President, either directly or through a Federal agency, to hold public hearings on price increases he deemed a threat to the Nation's economic stability, and on associated wage increases when they were termed a cause of the price increases. The House report said this requirement was aimed chiefly at "concentrated industries where relatively few firms account for most of the output."

The bill also required the President to include in each year's Economic Report, "in quantitative terms," the levels of employment, production and purchasing power which he deemed "maximum." It also directed the President to include monetary and credit policies in the economic review, as well as any divergent Federal Reserve Board views on them.

The bill amplified the Employment Act's goals by stating that the term "maximum production" included "the concept of sustained growth," and that the term "maximum purchasing power" included "the concept of reasonable price stability." The House report said "sustained growth should always be our national policy," and that "productive facilities as well as their utilization" should be "constantly expanded as needed."

Eleven Republican members of the House Committee, in minority views, said the bill's "sweeping provisions" were "premature" in view of the Joint Economic Committee's current inquiry. They also said public hearings would amount to "price and wage control by inquisition," and that disclosure of Federal Reserve Board views would impair the board's independence.

● O'MAHONEY BILL -- Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) was the author a more limited bill to discourage price increases (S 215). S 215 would require major corporations in concentrated industries to notify the Federal Trade Commission in advance of plans to increase prices. The FTC could hold public hearings to determine "the justifiability of the proposed increase" but would have no power to prevent it. O'Mahoney said the measure was designed "to prevent by the light of advance publicity alone unnecessary and unwarranted price increases."

Kefauver's Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee held hearings on S 215 April 23-May 21. It was opposed by the Administration and business witnesses and received no further action.

MUNITIONS LOBBY

The House Armed Services, Special Investigations Subcommittee in 1959 held three months of hearings on rumors that a "munitions lobby" was trying to influence the awarding of defense contracts. Testimony centered on possible conflicts of interest in the employment by defense industries of retired military and Government civilian personnel.

Subcommittee Chairman F. Edward Hebert (D La.) said one of the aims of the hearings was to get the armed forces to adopt uniform regulations on what jobs retired officers might take in industry. During the Capitol Hill debate on the issue several proposals were made for legislation to limit retired officers' private employment in defense industries, but none was enacted.

Hearing testimony consisted mainly of denials of influence peddling by military and defense industry spokesmen, but the Subcommittee also heard Vice Admiral Hyman G. Rickover charge pressure by former associates. There were allegations that defense contractors entertained top-ranking military officers in attempts to influence contract decisions, and that advertisements were placed by rival missile manufacturers with the hope of influencing Congress.

Private employment of retired military and Government civilian personnel was defended by industry spokesmen at the hearings on grounds that their technical knowledge was invaluable.

Background

The so-called "munitions lobby" made newspaper headlines as a result of a June 3 White House press conference, when President Eisenhower was asked to comment on several Senators' statements that the President had spoken to them "rather sharply" about such a lobby and its attempts to change his defense program. The President said "obviously, political and financial considerations" got into defense plans and that "something besides the strict military needs of this country" might be influencing defense decisions.

The following day, Hebert said he had been instructed by Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the Armed Services Committee to start hearings quickly, with an eye to remedial legislation.

Before hearings began, however, the conflict of interest question was brought up during House consideration of the fiscal 1960 defense appropriation bill (HR 7454). The Appropriations Committee, in its May 28 report on the bill (H Rept 408), said it was "seriously concerned over problems which arise as a result of the acceptance by retired senior officers of employment in responsible executive positions with defense contractors." It requested the Secretary of Defense to supply the Committee with a list of retired officers of or above the rank of colonel who were employed in defense industry.

When the appropriation bill reached the floor, Rep. Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.) June 3 attempted to attach to it a rider to make ineligible for defense contracts any firm that hired retired military or naval officers above the rank of colonel within five years of their leaving the service. His amendment was defeated, first by a 130-131 standing vote and then by a 125-147 teller vote.

Members of Congress were split over the lobby question. Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) June 8 said, "I don't know any who deserve that label... they have not tried to lobby me." Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) of the House Appropriations Committee June 8 said registered lobbyists were not really the effective ones -- "the fellows who do the job operate out of the cocktail bars, the golf clubs and the social gatherings."

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) June 17 said 721 retired military officers were on the payrolls of 88 of the Nation's top 100 defense contractors. Douglas inserted in the Congressional Record an incomplete list prepared by the Defense Department of retired officers with the rank of colonel or Navy captain or above employed by the 100 corporations that hold 74 percent of all defense contracts. Douglas said 95 percent of defense contracts are negotiated, rather than awarded by competitive bidding, and added: "When companies with defense contracts hire former officers of high rank to negotiate with their former fellow officers...the potential and actual abuses (of the defense procurement system) are magnified."

LOBBY REGISTRATIONS

Congressional Quarterly in June checked the official lobby registrations and found that only 11 of the 50 firms with the biggest Defense Department contracts in fiscal 1958 had registered lobbyists in their employ.

The 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act requires "any person who shall engage himself for pay or for any consideration for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress" to file a registration form with the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House. No one is responsible for explaining or enforcing this law, however. And its provisions are generally considered vague.

CQ did not attempt to define munitions makers. Instead, it used the Defense Department's list of prime contractors. Of the top 50 firms on the list, ranked in terms of total defense contracts, 11 at some time had registered lobbyists working for them: General Electric Co., Lockheed Aircraft Corp., Martin Co., Raytheon Manufacturing Co., Radio Corp of America, Pan American World Airways Inc., General Motors Corp., Chance Vought Aircraft Inc., International Business Machines Corp., Motorola Inc., Philco Corp. The lobby law does not require notification when lobbyists stop working for an employer, so it was impossible to determine how many of those registered currently were active lobbyists.

Hearings

COMMITTEE -- House Armed Services, Special Investigations Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- July 7 - Sept. 10, intermittently, on employment of retired military officers by defense industries.

TESTIMONY -- July 7 -- Deputy Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr., formerly Secretary of the Navy, upheld the right of retired officers to work in defense industries, where he said they could use their "professional competence." He said retired officers still were members of the armed services, subject to military law, and that the Government periodically undertook to bring military regulations to their attention.

Gates disclosed that the Navy had sent questionnaires to its 4,200 retired officers and that of 3,400 replies some 300 indicated "some possibility of there being a conflict." He said none indicated any criminal law violation but that doubtful replies were being followed up.

(Gates wrote the Committee July 8 that detailed questionnaires had been sent to 500 ex-officers whose earlier responses had indicated a possibility of conflict of interest. From 430 answers received to date, Gates said, only five minor infractions of conflict-of-interest statutes had been "tentatively established." Four of these officers had already ended their jobs and the fifth was selling fire alarm equipment through competitive bids, Gates added.)

Gates said former officers came to see him, but he did not consider he was ever subjected to pressure. Former officers and Pentagon civilians sometimes came in, he said, to discuss "expediting" business, but this was not pressure, "it's presenting a point of view." Gates said selling to the Government, banned under some regulations for retirees, might be carried on by persons not designated as salesmen, and that the president of a firm often was its greatest salesman.

July 8 -- Sen. Douglas said his latest information showed that 768 former officers currently were employed by 97 large companies which frequently handled defense contracts.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) urged consideration of a bill he and Douglas introduced June 23 (S 2228) which would prohibit officers for two years after retirement from selling or negotiating with the Defense Department and permanently bar them from any dealings on matters for which they had been directly responsible while on active duty.

RICKOVER TESTIMONY

July 9 -- Vice Adm. Hyman G. Rickover said he had received many "visits or visitations" by former associates in the armed services but these ceased when "word got around that I am obtuse." He said outsiders "go higher up and get pressure put on me in that way." When ordered by Hebert to submit a list of names of those who had approached him, Rickover at first refused, then said he would supply the information provided no names were made public unless further inquiry was necessary. (The list was supplied July 24 and made public Sept. 1 -- see below.)

Rickover said the use of influence could be discouraged by requiring the Defense Secretary to submit periodic reports listing all contacts involving any business dealing between retired officers and personnel of the Defense Department.

July 10 -- Adm. Arthur W. Radford, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and a director of the Philco Corp., said one solution to the problem might be legislation to bar ex-officers from contract negotiations with the Pentagon for two or three years following their retirement.

July 21 -- Legislation similar to Radford's proposal was suggested in testimony by another former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, board chairman of the Bulova Watch Co.

July 22 -- Adm. Robert B. Carney, board chairman of Bath Iron Works, a Maine shipbuilding company, and consultant to several large firms doing defense work, said he thought "it is almost a physical impossibility for a retired officer to exert much influence" on the Pentagon. He agreed that the suggestion of Radford and Bradley for a two or three-year "cooling off" period might be an effective precaution.

July 23 -- Three former high-ranking officers employed by a leading defense contractor said they would have preferred to continue in Government work as civilians after they retired, but laws banning dual compensation for Government service had forced them into private industry. Urging Congress to repeal the dual pay law, which bars pensioned officers from earning more than $2,500 on the Government payroll, Lt. Gen. Clarence S. Irvine, former Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff for Materiel, said: "Retirement pay is for services rendered through many years. It has nothing to do whatsoever with what a retired officer does after his retirement."

Irvine, Maj. Gen. Herbert M. Jones, former Army Adjutant General, and Rear Adm. Stuart S. Murray, who commanded the U.S.S. Missouri and Pearl Harbor Naval Base, denied that their current positions with Avco Manufacturing Corp. conflicted with laws barring retired personnel from negotiations with the Pentagon.

INFLUENCE DENIED

Rear Adm. John M. Will, former chief of the Military Sea Transportation Service (MSTS), and Rear Adm. Albert G. Mumma, who once headed the Navy's Bureau of Ships, opposed any restrictions on the hiring of former military men by defense contractors. Will, since his Navy retirement the $55,000-a-year president of American Export Lines, said any retired officer who thought he could influence his former associates was "dumb and stupid."

July 28 -- Rear Adm. H.A. Houser, representing the Retired Officers Assn., said that existing restrictions on the business activities of retired officers should be repealed.

The National Assn. of Manufacturers agreed to submit to the Subcommittee a list of the major defense contractors who were members of the Assn. and the amount of dues each paid. Hebert ordered NAM's general counsel, Lambert H. Miller, to produce such a list after Miller said the group had opposed the extension of the Renegotiation Act -- legislation enabling the Government to recapture excessive profits from defense contractors. (See story p. 279)

July 29 -- The Subcommittee focused its attention on the Aerospace Industries Assn., an organization of firms manufacturing aircraft and missiles, formerly known as the Aircraft Industries Assn.

Retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Orval R. Cook, Aerospace president, said member companies' dues and assessments ranged up to $75,000 and were charged as business expenses against Government contracts. In addition, Cook said, the member firms deducted their contributions from their Federal income taxes because the association was considered a non-profit organization. Cook disagreed with Hebert's comment that "the taxpayer is paying to fight himself...and paying it two ways." He said the association had registered under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, but that its work was mainly technical. (For registrations, see p. 690)

In 1958, Cook testified, Aerospace took in $1,419,-115.95 in dues and assessments, of which $20,198 was paid out for entertainment. He said the association had not given any cocktail parties for Members of Congress or Defense Department officials, but that some of its employees might have. He agreed to submit a list.

July 30 -- Peter J. Schenk, president of the Air Force Assn., said the main function of the Air Force Assn. was to carry on educational and research activities. He denied that his organization had tried to influence high-level military decisions.

July 31 -- Lt. Gen. Walter L. Weible, executive vice president of the Assn. of the U.S. Army, and Frank Gard Jameson, president of the Navy League, said former military officers had a right to go into private industry. Weible said retired officers should stay out of the "selling business" when it involved the Government, but added that an officer should not be labeled "an undesirable character" if he went into industry.

Discounting the possibilities of influence peddling, Jameson said, "There is nothing as dead in the Pentagon as a retired officer."

He said retired officers functioned as a "much-needed catalyst in industry" by showing "ivory-towered scientists" how to make complex new weapons practical under combat conditions. Denying that the Navy League had ever tried to influence a contract award, Jameson said that one of its functions was to educate the public on the merits of certain new weapons. This was done, he said, by convincing constituents so they would "put the heat on" Congress.

Jameson and Weible opposed legislation prohibiting retired officers from working in defense industries.

Aug. 5 -- Frank Pace Jr., former Secretary of the Army and currently chairman of the board of the General Dynamics Corp., said he had cancelled a July 23 dinner party for the Air Force's Chief of Research and Development because of unfavorable public reaction. Pace said he and Dan Kimball, former Secretary of the Navy, would have been co-hosts at the affair to honor Gen. Bernard F. Schriever. Pace said he would have favored the dinner even if he had nothing to do with General Dynamics. The purpose of the dinner, to which some Congressmen and Senators were invited, he said, was to discuss informally "some problems Gen. Schriever would face" in research.

BOMARC-NIKE RIVALRY

Aug. 6 -- Three officials of the Boeing Airplane Company denied that a full-page advertisement of the Bomarc missile published in Washington newspapers May 27 was an attempt to influence Congress or the public to favor the Air Force missile over the Army's Nike-Hercules.

Harold H. Mansfield, Boeing's director of public relations, said the ad was part of a planned series to counteract a "concerted campaign of misinformation" about the Bomarc. He said it was designed "to provide information we felt was needed so that the military decision would be based on knowledge rather than bias."

Aug. 7 -- Gen. Benjamin W. Chidlaw, former commanding general of the Air Materiel Command and currently vice president of Thompson Ramo Woolridge Inc., warned the Subcommittee not to propose "unduly restrictive" legislation to prevent retired officers from negotiating with the Pentagon. He said such a law could damage morale and discourage young officers from remaining in the service.

Chidlaw, who retired from the Air Force in 1955 after 33 years of service, said he could not remember "being pressured by a senior retired officer to follow a course of action, or asked to direct a specific program or project to his own selfish interests." He conceded, however, that a "cooling-off" period might be justified before a retired officer engaged in contract negotiations with his former colleagues.

J. D. Wright, board chairman of Thompson Ramo Woolridge, said the firm employed 12 retired officers, including five former generals. All were hired on the basis of their technical or administrative talents, he added.

Aug. 11 -- A former Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, Edwin V. Huggins, said some retired officers had attempted to influence Defense Department decisions while he was in the Pentagon during 1952-53 but that more pressure had come from Congress.

Huggins, currently executive vice president of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., said certain retired officers were "around too much," but that Defense officials "resented these outside pressures." "The retired officers we respected," he said, "didn't do it."

C.W. LaPierre, vice president of the General Electric Co., agreed with Huggins in warning the Subcommittee not to recommend restrictive legislation that would hinder the future employment of retired officers. He said he had not seen a case where a retired officer could help to influence a procurement contract.

Aug. 12 -- W.M. Reynolds, public relations director of the Western Electric Corp., said Army public information officers had suggested that Western Electric advertise a missile which was competing for Congressional appropriations. Western Electric was described as one of the principal contractors for the Nike-Hercules anti-aircraft missile. Western Electric vice president C.R. Smith said his company had been concerned about a Defense Department order cutting production on the missile pending Congressional appropriations. He and Donald W. Douglas Jr., president of the Douglas Aircraft Corp., denied the Nike ad contained any misinformation. Douglas said the ad was "not competitive but institutional."

BAHAMAS WEEKENDS

Aug. 13 -- The board chairman of the Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Co., George M. Bunker, said his company regularly had flown high-ranking military officers to the Bahamas Islands for weekend parties at a country club. He said the trips were designed to bring about a "close relationship" between the company and military, Government and industry officials.

Under questioning, Bunker said Martin, which builds the Titan missile, had claimed the costs of the weekend parties were business expenses and thus were tax deductible. (The Internal Revenue Service later disallowed the claim. Bunker named the officers Sept. 10. See below)

Aug. 14 -- Former Secretary of the Navy Dan A. Kimball, president of the Aerojet General Corp., said the company had helped 26 of its employees, all retired officers or former Defense Department employees, with answers to a Subcommittee questionnaire. Kimball explained that the 26 had sought the company's advice on their replies to certain questions regarding their contacts with the Pentagon.

The employees were asked if they had "ever solicited or participated in any discussions" for their companies with Pentagon officials. They were also asked to give details and the names of the persons present at any such talks. Hebert said the 26 had given identical replies.

Kimball also defended the proposed dinner party for Gen. Schriever, about which Pace testified Aug. 5. He said such parties served a useful purpose, but that the Schriever party had been cancelled because of adverse publicity. "I have no apologies for that party, or any I may have in the future, which I intend to have," Kimball said.

Aug. 18 -- Newspaper columnist Drew Pearson said that Dr. Richard Porter of General Electric had used "considerable influence" to get the Air Force to adopt GE's Vanguard rocket engine for its space vehicles. He said that Porter, as a member of a "secret committee of nine" on satellite programs, had great prestige and had used it in an attempt to influence the late Donald A. Quarles, then Air Force research chief and later Deputy Secretary of Defense, to drop the rockets developed by Dr. Wernher von Braun in favor of the Vanguard.

Pearson and his assistant, Jack Anderson, also told of several Washington hotel suites allegedly retained by defense contractors to entertain military officers and of a "hunters' and fishermen's paradise" off Long Island allegedly used by the Sperry Rand Co. for the same purposes. Both declined to state the sources of their information.

ARMY PROPOSED ADS

Aug. 19 -- Full-page newspaper advertisements promoting the Nike-Hercules anti-aircraft missile were placed at the suggestion of Army information officers, the Subcommittee was told by Under Secretary of the Army Hugh H. Milton. Milton's statement confirmed Aug. 12 testimony by officials of the Western Electric Corp.

Aug. 20 -- Spokesmen for the General Accounting Office said the Convair division of the General Dynamics Corp. might realize an extra $3.4 million profit on a jet fighter plane contract because it had overestimated costs by more than $12 million. The GAO witnesses said Government auditors had been denied access to Convair's records on a billion-dollar jet bomber contract and a $600-million Atlas missile contract. (General Dynamics board chairman Frank Pace Aug. 24 promised that Convair's records would be opened to GAO auditors.)

Parties given for Air Force officers by defense contractors at island resorts "don't look good," Assistant Secretary Philip B. Taylor told the Subcommittee. Referring to Aug. 13 accounts of such entertainment sponsored by the Martin Aircraft Co., Taylor said the Air Force "will take steps to see this thing is not continued."

Aug. 25 -- Dr. Richard Porter of GE, commenting on Drew Pearson's Aug. 18 testimony, denied he had used improper influence in the selection of the General Electric-powered Vanguard rocket as the first U.S. space vehicle. Porter said he had offered to resign from a technical advisory committee in 1955 when he learned it was considering a General Electric rocket engine, but was persuaded to stay on by its chairman. He added that the committee vote was 5-2 for the GE engine so that his vote could not have influenced the outcome.

Aug. 28 -- Aerojet president Kimball denied his company had used improper pressure in securing the contract for the Polaris missile and said Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson had made misleading statements in their Aug. 18 testimony. Kimball said the "outstanding false impression" given by Pearson and Anderson was that Aerojet had little experience in the field of solid fuels such as were used in the Polaris.

Anderson, citing unidentified sources, had testified that the Thiokol Co. would have obtained the Polaris contract "if it were not for the influence of Kimball."

Kimball traced the history of Aerojet back to 1942 and called upon the company's founder and chief technical adviser, Dr. Theodore von Karman, to produce technical data proving Aerojet's superiority in manufacturing both solid and liquid propellants.

Kimball also denied Pearson's allegation that Aerojet maintained a hotel suite in Washington for the entertainment of Government and military officials. He said the company did have a single room in a Washington hotel which was used by company officials on visits.

Sept. 1 -- A list of retired officers who Admiral Rickover said had tried to influence him was made public by the Subcommittee, which said it was of little value to the investigation. Three incidents were cited in which the Admiral thought the investigators might be interested. Hebert told newsmen, however, that none of the three seemed worth following through.

Sept. 10 -- In a closed-door session, the Subcommittee received from Martin Aircraft Co.'s board chairman, George Bunker, a list of military officers he believed the company entertained at an island resort in the Bahamas. (A list of 26 names was released Dec. 4)

Bunker later told reporters he had been unable to get an accurate list because the club used for the weekend parties was closed for the summer. He said he had given a list from memory. He added: "I defended as vigorously as I knew how the character and reputation of principal people in the military establishment.... I said I couldn't conceive that such people would be influenced by playing golf with George Bunker."

VIET-NAM AID

Administration of the foreign aid program in Viet-Nam was investigated by two Congressional subcommittees in 1959. The inquiries grew out of charges of "serious waste" and "outrageous scandal" made by Scripps-Howard writer Albert M. Colegrove in a newspaper series.

In the Senate, the Foreign Relations Subcommittee on State Department Organization and Public Affairs held hearings on Colegrove's charges July 30-31, during which Administration witnesses defended the program's administration. Similar hearings were held by the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee No. 2 Aug. 11-14.

After Congress adjourned, members of both Subcommittees made on-the-spot investigations of the aid program in Viet-Nam. Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), chairman of the Senate group, Dec. 9 said the inquiry had been completed and his Subcommittee "now has the information necessary to reach significant conclusions and to make useful recommendations."

Earlier, the investigators were rebuffed in an effort to obtain information from the Executive Branch. President Eisenhower Nov. 10 denied a request by Mansfield for access to a 1957 International Cooperation Administration report entitled "Evaluation of Viet-Nam Program." The President said disclosure of the report "would not be compatible with the national interest." He described the report as an "internal Executive Branch communication comprising opinion and advice on official matters" for the information and use of the ICA director. Congress included information disclosure requirements in the Mutual Security Act of 1959, but in signing the bill the President said the provisions "cannot alter the recognized constitutional duty and power of the Executive" in this area. (See story, p. 178)

SELECT COMMITTEE LABOR INVESTIGATIONS

The Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field in 1959 closed up its investigations of labor racketeering and prepared to go out of existence early in 1960. Its members could point to enactment of the 1959 labor reform law as the chief fruit of their three-year probe. (See story, p. 156)

The Committee's 1959 investigations covered a variety of subjects, ranging from coin machines to newspaper deliveries. The final public hearings, on the United Automobile Workers (AFL-CIO), were conducted by Republican members over the protests of the Democrats. A projected inquiry into union political activities, also urged by the GOP members, never was pursued.

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, chief target of the Committee throughout its career, figured again in the 1959 hearings. But at year's end, the Teamsters' fate appeared to be largely in the hands of the Federal courts and the three-man board of monitors established in 1958 to oversee the union's affairs.

Background

The Select Committee was established in 1957 under the chairmanship of Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.). Its first-year hearings led to the expulsion of the Teamsters Union from the AFL-CIO. (1957 Almanac p. 777)

The 1958 Committee investigations of labor racketeering headlined appearances by Teamsters President James R. Hoffa. (1958 Almanac p. 674)

The Committee ended its 1958 activities by making public documents bearing on the role of ex-Sen. George H. Bender (R Ohio 1955-57), $250-a-day chairman of the Teamsters' own anti-racketeering commission which was appointed by Hoffa to counter the activities of the board of monitors. Committee investigators Dec. 10 released two invoices which they said showed 1955 Teamster gifts of engraved champagne ice buckets to nine persons, including Bender and Federal Judge James C. Connell of Cleveland, who also figured in 1958 Teamster affairs. Chairman McClellan, in a Dec. 12 letter to Monitor Chairman Martin F. O'Donoghue, said union payments to Bender totaled $24,800 through Nov. 14 and constituted "possible wasteful duplication of Teamsters Union funds." Bender Dec. 30 disputed McClellan's figures, said he was giving most of the money to charities. (1958 Almanac p. 681 and Teamsters Investigation, below)

Although the Select Committee originally was scheduled to go out of existence in 1959, the Senate Jan. 31, 1959 adopted a resolution (S Res 44) extending its life until Jan. 31, 1960 and granting the Committee $750,000 for 1959 expenses. The Committee's composition of four Democrats and four Republicans remained unchanged, but Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) replaced retired Sen. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y. 1947-59).

Early 1959 Hearings

Throughout the first half of 1959, the Committee held scattered hearings on matters it also had explored in 1958, focusing principally on the Teamsters and Carpenters Unions. Highlights of the testimony:

Jan. 27 -- William Rumminger, Detroit trucking firm salesman, said he had paid $19,711 in commissions to Roland McMaster, business agent for a Detroit local of the Teamsters, who obtained business for him. The commissions, Rumminger said, were half his net profit on trucking business he obtained for the firm. Joseph Maher, a committee investigator, said McMaster had had financial dealings with several other Detroit trucking companies. McMaster invoked the Fifth Amendment.

UNIONS OVERCHARGED

In connection with its investigation of union welfare-pension plan insurance, the Committee heard testimony from Seymour Goodman, New York State insurance department examiner, who said Teamsters Union President James R. Hoffa had been responsible for a total of $1.3 million in overcharges to three labor union groups. Goodman testified that Allen Dorfman, Chicago insurance agent, made the overcharges on the welfare-pension insurance plans of the Central Conference of Teamsters, the Michigan Conference of Teamsters and Chicago Local 1031 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO).

Staff Investigator Martin Uhlmann said the amount cited by Goodman did not include a $600,000 payment by the three unions to Dr. Leo Perlman, president of the Union Casualty Co. of New York, holder of the original insurance contracts. Uhlmann said Perlman had set up a subsidiary firm which charged the union a fee for servicing its insurance policies. Dorfman invoked the Fifth Amendment.

Jan. 28 -- Uhlmann produced copies of letters and telegrams he said passed between Hoffa and Perlman to negotiate reduced benefits and raise premiums for members of the Michigan Conference of Teamsters. Uhlmann said this was a violation of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 because Hoffa was not a trustee.

Jan. 29 -- Paul Dorfman, father of Allen and former head of Chicago's Federal Union of Waste Material Handlers (AFL-CIO), invoked the Fifth Amendment in response to the Committee's questions as to whether his associations with Hoffa and Chicago racketeers were major factors in alleged collusive transactions to cut hospital and medical insurance benefits of Teamsters Union members. (See Committee report that follows and 1954 Almanac p. 305)

Jan. 30 -- Edward H. Weiss of Newton, Mass., a petroleum jobber, said Charles Johnson Jr., international vice president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners (AFL-CIO) had used union influence to push gasoline and oil sales to contractors. He testified that Johnson's wife held 25 percent interest in the Weiss oil and gas firm and that Johnson had produced 19 new accounts for the firm on which Johnson got 50 percent of the net profit.

Two Committee staff members said Johnson had received $224,600 in salary from the Carpenters' Union in 1955-57 for three different union positions he held simultaneously. Nathan Herzfeld, a founder of Yonkers Raceway, New York, said the track had paid Johnson $30,000 for settling a quarrel among rival unions and then had hired him as labor consultant at a $7,000 fee.

Feb. 3 -- John Cunningham, former head of the 13-member group of rank-and-file members opposing Hoffa's election as Teamsters Union president, said the Teamsters Union had paid his hotel bills for the past five months. He said he did not know the source of the money, however, until two weeks before when Moss Herman, a former New York Teamsters Union member who gave the money to Cunningham, said the money had come from the Teamsters Union. Cunningham said he had told Herman at the time that it could jeopardize the suits currently pending against the Teamsters. (1957 Almanac, p. 777; 1958 Almanac p. 674)

Feb. 4 -- The Committee heard further testimony on the alleged connection of Charles Johnson with oil and gas contracts, particularly in Baltimore, Md. (See Committee report)

Feb. 5 -- Sidney Cohen of Los Angeles, a Teamster member, said he signed an agreement in January in Teamster President Hoffa's office waiving his December 1958 election as Local 208 secretary-treasurer in favor of the Hoffa-backed incumbent, John W. Filipoff. Cohen said a campaign of intense harassment followed his election, so he agreed to resume his previous, subordinate post of local president and business agent. He said he regretted his action and had filed suit to oust Filipoff.

Committee investigator Pierre Salinger said an audit of union books showed Local 208 had made an $11,166 loan to finance an organizational picketing drive headed by Gus Brown, whom he described as "a known Communist" ousted from the CIO in 1950 and active in the Communist party as recently as 1956. Salinger said correspondence showed Hoffa and Teamster vice president Harold Gibbons had considered a possible union affiliation with Brown.

Feb. 6 -- Morris Gurewitz and Ben H. Cohen, operators of Los Angeles rendering plants, said Mike Singer, Teamster Local 626 business agent, dictated prices in their businesses and compelled them to contribute some of their business to a new firm headed by Singer's friends. Singer invoked the Fifth Amendment when questioned.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Feb. 26 -- Vice Chairman Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) said the Committee planned an extensive investigation of labor union tactics and spending in political campaigns. The inquiry, he said, would delve into (1) the alleged use of union flower funds for purposes other than buying flowers for the sick and dead, and (2) alleged violation of Federal laws prohibiting unions from participating in Federal election campaigns.

Glimco Hearings

The Committee March 11 focused on the activities of Teamster Local 777 President Joseph P. Glimco, of Chicago, with testimony by staff investigator Alphonse Calabrese that the union leader, from 1954 to 1957, had used $124,000 in union funds for his defense in an extortion trial. Calabrese said that during the trial, which ended with Glimco's acquittal, various witnesses, who had told the grand jury they had paid money to Glimco's group because of fear, changed their stories by testifying at the trial that "they paid because they liked him and not because of fear."

Glimco's predecessor as president of Local 777, Dominic Abato, told the Committee that he and other union officers were forced to kick back large portions of their salaries to Glimco. McClellan estimated the total of alleged kickbacks at about $2,500 a month.

Calabrese March 12 said that in 1953 Glimco and his secretary, Laverne Murray, shared a Los Angeles hotel room at a cost to Glimco's local of $1,045.65. It also was alleged that $50,000 in the local's funds were used to build two homes, one for Dominic Senese, head of local 703, and the other for Glimco. The $50,000 allegedly was concealed in an $85,000 fee charged to the local by builder Frank Pantaleo for remodeling union headquarters. Glimco's home allegedly was listed as being jointly owned by himself and his secretary, Laverne Murray. Miss Murray, Pantaleo and Senese all invoked the Fifth Amendment when questioned by the Committee.

Also on March 12, Committee investigators said the Broadway Sheet Metal Co., two-thirds of which was owned by Senese and Victor Comforte, whom the Committee described as a powerful figure in the Chicago underworld, had done 60 percent of the construction on the Nike missile installations in the Chicago area. Comforte, pleading Fifth Amendment protection, refused to discuss the Broadway company or his alleged relationship with Senese. Chairman McClellan said he would move "at once" to present a written demand to the Defense Department to blacklist the firm from future defense contracts.

INSURANCE COMPANY TIES

The second phase of the Chicago Teamsters investigation began March 17 with the allegation by investigator Calabrese that the Dearborn Insurance Agency of Chicago had received excessive commissions for health and welfare insurance policies covering Glimco's Local 777, Senese's Local 703 and Local 710, headed by John T. O'Brien, a Teamsters international vice president. Calabrese said that from 1950 to 1958 the premiums for the three Teamsters locals and for Local 593 of the Hotel, Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union (AFL-CIO) totaled $14.5 million and that commissions paid to Dearborn by the Occidental Life Insurance Co. of California exceeded by $493,000 the maximum amount considered ethical by the insurance industry. Testimony further alleged that Frank Brown, president emeritus of O'Brien's Local 710, was once a director of the Dearborn agency and that O'Brien may have owned stock in the firm.

Allen L. Creitz, a former official of Occidental, which underwrote the policies, told the Committee March 18 that he had collected dividends totaling $58,000 during the 1950-58 period as a stockholder in Dearborn. He said his dual role was a violation of Occidental's regulations and that Occidental had forced him to resign after learning about it.

Dearborn president Harland Maris March 18 pleaded the Fifth Amendment when the Committee asked whether Brown and O'Brien were secret partners in the agency. Two of Maris' partners, the agency's lawyer and its accountant, said they knew nothing of such an arrangement.

Glimco, testifying March 18, invoked the Fifth Amendment to all questions relating to previous testimony.

The Occidental Life Insurance Co. March 19 wired Chief Counsel Kennedy notifying him that all brokerage relationships with Maris and the Dearborn agency had been terminated.

Charges by Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho) that O'Brien and his lieutenants were "like the robber barons of old" resulted from testimony by investigator James Mundie March 19 that the leadership of Local 710 -- O'Brien, Brown, Michael J. Healy and Frank Schmitt -- had paid themselves $1,136,275.97 in union money in the previous seven years, with almost half going to O'Brien. The money was taken by the leaders as salaries, commissions,

Christmas bonuses and vacation allowances, Mundie said, and the "commissions" were simply a part of every member's dues -- 90 cents for every $4 collected. O'Brien pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- March 10 -- The Committee voted against making a public investigation of alleged bribe offers to its chief counsel, Robert F. Kennedy. Kennedy, in reply to a press conference question in Milwaukee March 6, said several labor and management witnesses had promised political support for his brother -- Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), a Committee member and potential 1960 Presidential candidate -- in return for a softening of the Committee's investigation. Following the March 10 meeting, McClellan and Mundt said they believed too much had been made of what apparently was a rather casual remark.

OTHER HEARINGS

The Committee March 10 questioned Benjamin Lapensohn, Philadelphia advertising man, on why Government documents used as evidence by a House investigating committee during the 1940s allegedly turned up in Lapensohn's private files. Lapensohn, who was described as a "fixer" in 1958 Select Committee hearings and who was reportedly indicted by a New York grand jury on charges of forgery and larceny in 1958, refused to answer most questions, pleading the Fifth Amendment. (1958 Almanac p. 684 and Committee report, below)

In May 7-8 hearings exploring charges of violence and denial of union rights to members of Houston, Texas, Local 74 of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (AFL-CIO), the Committee heard testimony from Leland Head, business manager of the local. Head May 8 testified that Joseph P. McCollum, an international vice president of the union, had sought $500 from the local's members to have a member of another local killed. He said Clarence Wilkins, the intended victim, earlier had been acquitted of charges of murdering James R. Huff, an official of the local. McCollum denied the charges and later submitted to a lie detector test that cleared him. Head's lie detector test was "inconclusive," according to Counsel Kennedy.

Committee Reports

The Committee Aug. 5 and Oct. 23 issued reports (S Rept 621, Parts I and II) covering investigations conducted in 1958. The Committee's first interim report, covering 1957, was issued March 24, 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 674)

Following were the "findings" contained in S Rept 621:

● JAMES R. HOFFA -- The Committee said testimony involving the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, headed by Hoffa, "wove through stories of violence, financial manipulations, callous repression of democratic rights and racketeer control." The Committee said "nothing could be further from the truth" than Hoffa's claim that "he is first and foremost interested in the betterment of the working conditions of his union members." "Time and again," the Committee said, it had found Hoffa "to be faithless to the members of his own union. He has betrayed these members so frequently that it has become abundantly clear that Hoffa's chief interest is his own advancement and that of his friends and cronies -- a great number of whom are racketeers."

The Committee said that Hoffa did nothing to amend New York Teamster contracts "calling for low wages and poor working conditions;" that Hoffa or his associates had participated in sweetheart contracts (with Englander Mattress Co. and Midwest Burlap & Bag Co., for example); that Hoffa "has used union funds for his own benefit and that of his friends"; that he had "consistently supported the interests of racketeer friends over those of his own members;" that Hoffa and his "chief aides have consistently repressed democratic rights within the union;" and that "Hoffa has connived with and maneuvered union insurance to racketeer friends, bringing those friends gigantic profits."

The Committee cited 21 different matters it investigated in 1958 which it said "involved improper actions by Hoffa and/or his top associates" and concluded: "The Committee is convinced that if Hoffa remains unchecked he will successfully destroy the decent labor movement in the United States."

● DETROIT LAUNDRIES -- The Committee said 1958 testimony "leads to the inference" that Hoffa received "some or all" of a $17,500 payoff allegedly made in 1949 to end a labor dispute between a Detroit Teamster local and the Detroit Institute of Laundering. The Committee said the Institute paid the money to Joe Holtzman, a labor relations consultant, "for the purpose of influencing Hoffa to intercede in the laundry dispute." (1958 Almanac p. 678)

● THE DORFMANS -- The Committee said "the evidence is clear" that Hoffa used two large Midwest Teamster welfare funds "to pay off a longstanding debt to the Chicago underworld and to the corrupt labor leader who introduced him to Midwest mob society, Paul Dorfman." The Committee said Hoffa had chosen as brokers to handle placing of the two welfare funds Paul, Allen and Rose Dorfman, "who had absolutely no experience in the field and no office space before Hoffa successfully maneuvered the insurance business to them in 1950 and 1951." In eight years the Dorfmans received more than $3 million in service fees, the Committee said. "The evidence establishes the Teamsters paid $1,650,000 in excess commissions and service fees."

● A & P AND BUTCHER UNION -- The Committee found that the eastern division of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. in 1952 had participated in an "elaborate conspiracy" with high-ranking members of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of America (AFL-CIO) "to force more than 10,000 unorganized...employees into the union." In return, the Committee said, the union secretly guaranteed the A&P would retain a then-existing 45-hour work week for five years, "an extremely attractive and profitable incentive for the A&P, measurable... in millions of dollars." (1958 Almanac p. 685)

● NEW YORK BUTCHERS -- The Committee said Max Block and members of his family treated New York Locals 342 and 640 of the Butchers Union as "their own personal property." From 1955-57 they received $241,000 in salaries and expenses, the Committee said, and in addition "manipulated another $293,000 in questionable items." The Committee said the Blocks used their union positions to get businesses the union negotiated with to make loans or payments or buy stock in enterprises in which the Blocks had personal interests. In some cases, the Committee said, the firm making the payment received "exemptions from payments into (union) pension funds."

● LOCAL 107, INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS, Philadelphia, Pa. -- The Committee said that "by the use of subterfuge, intimidation, threats, and physical violence" the local's control went into the hands of "a group of greedy and unscrupulous officers headed by Raymond Cohen." The report said Cohen employed "unconscionable and ruthless" methods to win a 1954 election as the local's secretary-treasurer, and then instituted a spending program "which amounted to nothing less than a looting of the local's treasury." (1958 Almanac p. 683)

The Committee said Benjamin Lapensohn, Cohen's "fixer," also "made a large fortune...by exploiting both sides in labor-management relations with a complete disregard for the welfare of either." It also criticized the Philadelphia Bar Assn. for acting "in a manner not in keeping with the stipulated high ethical standards of the legal profession" in its handling of what the Committee termed "unethical conduct" by two member-attorneys who represented the local.

The Committee also found that the Food Fair Co. was "shamefully involved" in deals with the local, and that the Justice Department "should have taken action by this time" in the matter.

(A Philadelphia grand jury Sept. 19 indicted seven men on charges of forgery, conspiracy and misappropriation of funds from Teamsters Local 107. An investigation of the local had been ordered Sept. 3 and the Senate Sept. 11 authorized McClellan's Committee to turn over to the grand jury its documentary evidence on alleged Local 107 criminal activities, compiled during the 1958 hearings.

(Those indicted were: Joseph Grace, local president; Raymond Cohen, secretary-treasurer; Benjamin Lapensohn, hired by the union to work on a yearbook; Abraham D. Berman and Edward F. Walker, business agents; Joseph E. Hartsough, Cohen's secretary, and John J. Elco, a member.)

● UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA (AFL-CIO) AND MAXWELL C. RADDOCK -- The Committee said it could not understand the union's failure to remove from office its vice president, Charles Johnson Jr., and charged he had "unscrupulously and greedily misused his power and position" to profit in payoff deals with employers. The report said he had received a total of $224,600 in salaries and expenses in 1955-57 for various union positions, and also took $96,500 in commissions for petroleum products sold by Penn Products Co. to major construction firms with which the union had collective bargaining agreements. It said evidence showed the transactions were "nothing more than payoffs to Johnson."

The Committee said the union's funds had been "seriously misused" under the leadership of its president, Maurice A. Hutcheson, and that Hutcheson had used Maxwell C. Raddock "as a fixer" in an attempt to "head off" indictments of himself and other union officers in the Indiana highways land scandals. Raddock also was "overpaid some $200,000," the report said, for producing a biography of Hutcheson's father, the late William L. Hutcheson, a former Carpenters' president, with "huge sections of the book" plagiarized "from other more knowledgeable authors." (1958 Almanac p. 675)

(A Washington, D.C., grand jury Oct. 20 indicted the following four men on contempt of Congress charges growing out of 1958 Senate hearings: Maurice A. Hutcheson; William Presser, president of Teamster Local 555 in Cleveland; Peter Licavoli of Detroit, who was serving a prison sentence for income tax evasion, and Ernest M. High of New York, editor of Spotlight Publications, publishers of labor periodicals. Both Hutcheson and Presser refused to answer specific Committee questions, while Licavoli and High failed to respond to Committee subpenas. (1958 Almanac p. 709)

● HOTEL AND RESTAURANT EMPLOYEES' AND BARTENDERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION, Chicago Area (AFL-CIO) -- The Committee found that "while the union has moved at least partially to clean its own house, the only response from the industry has been to heap abuse on the Committee for looking into the matter in the first place." It also found that the Chicago Restaurant Assn. was "guilty of improper conduct in its handling of labor relations for its members," and had "followed an undeviating policy of using its resources to defeat legitimate unionization." It said the mobster-dominated Chicago union locals served only to give "a cloak of legitimacy to what was nothing more than a pure extortion racket." (1958 Almanac p. 676)

The Committee said it "places no credence" in assertions of the restaurant association's leaders that they were completely ignorant of methods employed by Abraham Teitelbaum, the association's labor counsel, and his successor, Anthony V. Champagne, to effect "settlements" with union officers, and that the organization's "voluntary fund" was principally a "slush fund for the placating of racketeers and the purchase of labor peace."

The Committee said Teitelbaum and Champagne hired two "underworld personages" -- Louis Romano and Sam English -- as "labor experts."

● OVERALL SUPPLY INDUSTRY, Detroit Area -- The Committee found that the Star Coverall Supply Co. was financially backed "by some of the most notorious figures of the Detroit underworld," and that certain Detroit automobile dealers were "only too glad to do business with" the firm if it meant they would not have to do business with legitimate unions. The report said the company was able to take over business of legitimately operated companies through use of pressure and with the aid of "ex-convict Teamster business agent Herman Kierdorf," and that Kierdorf's actions "are a reflection on the type of leadership provided the Teamsters by its general president, James R. Hoffa." The Committee said Kierdorf, as a Teamster officer, "started to intimidate and coerce Detroit automobile dealers on behalf of" Star Coverall shortly after he testified before the Committee in 1957. (1958 Almanac p. 677)

(Sen. Capehart noted in the report that he was not a Committee member until February 1959 and consequently had taken no part in preparing the report.)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- An A&P spokesman in New York said "A&P's negotiations with the (Butcher) union were fairly and ethically conducted in strict accord with all state and Federal regulations."

Teamsters Investigation

In hearings June 25-July 15, the Committee wound up its lengthy investigation of the Teamsters. In two final appearances, Hoffa was quizzed on whether he had attempted to clean up the union. Highlights of the testimony:

June 25 -- Preliminary witnesses were called in connection with alleged extortion by Teamster officials. William J. Poch, business manager of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, said that following a Teamster strike against the newspaper in 1951, Theodore R. Cozza, head of the Teamsters' Pittsburgh newspaper truck drivers' local, was hired as a truck driver and paid over $100,000 during a nine-year period to maintain "labor peace." Poch said Cozza did "very little" work as a truck driver and the payments were made "for fear of disturbing our labor relations." Pierre Salinger, a Committee investigator, said that in addition to payments from the paper, Cozza received $68,056 in salary and expenses plus a $7,000 car and $3,000 for a European trip from the Teamsters during the same period. Called to testify, Cozza invoked the Fifth Amendment.

SALARY PAID EXTORTIONIST

Samuel Goldstein, brought to the stand under armed guard because he was serving a prison term for extortion, also invoked the Fifth Amendment but acknowledged he was receiving $400 a week salary from the Teamsters during his prison stay. A Committee investigator testified Goldstein was still president of Teamster New York Local 239 and Committee Counsel Robert F. Kennedy said Hoffa had failed to dismiss Goldstein as he promised to do in 1958. Hoffa said the Goldstein case had not been brought to his attention through union channels yet.

Others to plead the Fifth Amendment June 25 when questioned on alleged shakedowns and extortion included: Joseph De Grandis of Teamster Local 266, New York; Joseph Blumetti, president of Teamster Local 410, Youngstown, Ohio; and Harold Gross. Counsel Kennedy said Gross was still president of Teamster Local 320 in Miami, Fla., although testimony in prior hearings linked him with shakedowns against New York newspapers and named him as a one-time member of the so-called Murder Inc. mob. (See N.Y. Newspaper hearings, below)

HOFFA TESTIMONY

June 26 -- "I do not propose now or at any time to say that the invoking of an amendment of the Constitution of the U.S. necessarily means that an individual should be suspended from office," Hoffa said in response to questioning by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) as to why he didn't act against union officials who pleaded the Fifth Amendment. Hoffa added that although he had "the power and the authority" to suspend such officials, he wouldn't do it while the Committee was investigating them. Hoffa said, "When the final chapter is closed in this Committee, we (the union) will then take up one by one these charges."

Sen. Kennedy said he had "no hope" of Hoffa "ever cleaning up the union."

The Committee produced letters and minutes of local union meetings showing that two Teamster officials, Glenn W. Smith and H.L. Bolling, involved in a Tennessee income tax evasion and embezzlement case, were still receiving salaries from their local and holding office, although Hoffa and his attorney Edward Bennett Williams recently had told a Federal court Hoffa had suspended the two men. Hoffa produced evidence showing he had written a letter ordering the men suspended and promised to find out why his order had been disobeyed.

Those pleading the Fifth Amendment June 26 included: William Presser, chairman of the Ohio Council of Teamsters, who refused to tell whether he had pledged automobiles he didn't own as security for $24,117.51 in loans from the union; and John J. McNamara and John O'Rourke, both New York Teamster officials, who refused to discuss allegations they deprived union members of the right to participate in union business.

MISUSE OF FUNDS

June 29, 30 -- A Committee investigator and other witnesses testified concerning alleged improper use of union funds. Benjamin Dranow, cited as an associate of Hoffa, took the Fifth Amendment when questioned about a $1 million loan from the union for his Minneapolis department store shortly before the store went bankrupt. He also refused to answer questions concerning alleged improper use of union funds in a Florida real estate project. Others invoking the Fifth Amendment June 29-30: New York businessman Nat Gordon, on questions concerning contracts to make jackets for the union, without benefit of competitive bids, resulting in high profits to Dranow; and Louis Triscaro, Cleveland Teamster official, when questioned about union funds used for loans to a group involved in an alleged plot to smuggle munitions to Fulgencio Batista, Cuban leader.

July 1, 6 -- Raymond Cohen, Philadelphia Teamster official, invoked the Fifth Amendment in response to questions on whether he had returned any of the $750,000 in union funds the Committee contended he had misued, or whether Hoffa had taken any steps to remove him from office. (1958 Almanac p. 683) Counsel Kennedy said Cohen, since 1958 when the charges were made, had been promoted in union ranks. Others to plead the Fifth Amendment July 1 on alleged connections with the underworld were New York Teamster officials Abe Gordon and Milton Holt. In hearings July 6, those invoking the Fifth Amendment in response to questions on allegations of union shakedowns and other improper activities: Anthony Provenzano, president of Teamster Local 560, Hoboken, N.J.; Anthony Castellito,, Local 560's business agent; William Jacobson; Joseph P. Glimco; and Kenneth Collig. (For earlier Glimco testimony, see p. 732)

July 7 -- Michael G. Communale (who July 8 was relieved of his post as assistant prosecutor of Hudson County, N.J.) denied earlier allegations that he was put on a New Jersey transportation company's payroll to insure labor peace with the Teamsters.

Witnesses who had represented management in Eastern truckline wage negotiations and Teamster members testified that because Eastern wage rates were higher than those which Hoffa had negotiated for Midwestern drivers when he was chairman of the Teamsters Central Conference, Hoffa tried to undercut East Coast Teamster unions in their negotiations for higher wages. Ted Daley, secretary-treasurer of Teamster Local 445, New York, said Hoffa in 1958 had tried to soften demands the union made against Anchor Motor Freight Lines of Cleveland.

BENDER TESTIMONY

July 8, 9 -- Appearing as a volunteer witness, ex-Sen. Bender said he did not receive Teamster money or political support in his successful 1954 Ohio Senate campaign against Democrat Thomas Burke. The Committee produced sworn statements from two Ohio Teamster officials saying the union had supported Bender. Counsel Kennedy said that although Bender's campaign committee reported total contributions of $86,966, it failed to report $108,996 deposited to its account after the election. Bender July 9 termed "a damnable lie" implications that he was bribed when in 1954 he was chairman of a House subcommittee investigating the Union or that charges were dropped against Ohio Teamster officials. "No charges were dropped. A report was made to Congress on the hearings...no strings were pulled by me,"

Bender said. (1954 Almanac p. 307) Bender said he may have had support from individual Teamsters but no official union support. "When you run for office, you have to have the votes of the washed and unwashed as well," he said.

Also July 9, George S. Maxwell, Cleveland labor relations consultant, said that in 1954 or 1955 he had received a warning personally from Hoffa that Teamster Local 299 in Detroit did not like Negro over-the-road (long distance) drivers coming into Detroit and that "it might not be healthy for me" (Maxwell) if Negroes drove any more long distance trucks into the jurisdiction of Local 299 (Hoffa's home local).

July 10 -- Ross Hill, Compton, Calif., a Negro, said he had been subjected to costly racial discrimination by Local 299. He was allowed to haul freight in Detroit, he said, but couldn't pick up return loads as white drivers were able to do. Hill said he tried to join the local but was rejected. In a related development, 153 Negro members of Local 299 July 13 sent a telegram to Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) calling reports of racial discrimination in the local "completely false." McClellan said the telegram had no value as evidence since it was an unsworn statement. Those taking the Fifth Amendment July 10 included: Tom Keegan, aide to Teamster vice president John T. O'Brien; Louis Goldblatt, secretary-treasurer of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, who refused to say whether he had ever been a member of the Communist party or if he had ever approached anyone "directly or indirectly" in an attempt to get a court-appointed monitor of the Teamsters to resign.

July 13 -- Bartley C. Crum, a New York lawyer, testified he was approached by both Goldblatt and ILWU president Harry Bridges on a plan to induce former Teamster monitor Godfrey P. Schmidt to resign from the board of monitors and have Crum (who was Schmidt's attorney) replace him in order to pave the way for a merger of the two unions into a single giant transportation union. Crum also testified that Hoffa's attorney, Edward Bennett Williams, in a July 9 luncheon meeting, told him that the more than $100,000 in fees Schmidt was seeking from the Teamsters would be paid "if I (Crum) did not appear as a witness before this Committee."

Williams, sworn in as a volunteer witness, denied Crum's statement as "absolutely...false." He said Crum's testimony on alleged attempts to keep him from testifying was a "false, vicious and contrived smear." Harold Unger, another attorney who attended the luncheon, supported Williams: "It would have been ridiculous for him (Williams) to make such a statement. I would have remembered it if he had made it," Unger said.

July 14 -- Hoffa took the stand for his 14th appearance since the Select Committee began its hearings in 1957. "Crum himself made the statement that he thought Schmidt should be out and he should be a monitor," Hoffa said. Crum was interested in collecting Schmidt's fees only for selfish reasons, Hoffa said, because he could collect his fee as Schmidt's attorney only after Schmidt had collected what he maintained the Teamsters owed him.

HOFFA AND BRIDGES

Asked if he would favor the merger of the Teamsters and ILWU even if the new union were headed by a Communist, Hoffa said he would not and added that no American union currently was headed by a Communist despite insinuations against Bridges. Hoffa also said, "Harry Bridges is not going to become part of the Teamsters as long as I head it." Hoffa said current agreements between the two unions were on jurisdictional and organizational problems growing out of automation and mechanization of industry.

Hoffa challenged Counsel Kennedy to prove a statement that Hoffa was responsible for a number of Teamster contracts favoring employers rather than union members. Kennedy said it was already proved by the record. Kennedy also said, and Hoffa denied, that Hoffa had misappropriated certain union funds. Kennedy said quonset huts had been bought with $10,400 of union money for a hunting lodge in which Hoffa had an interest; Hoffa said the cost of the huts had been paid back to the union.

During the hearing, Hoffa said it was a "lie" that he and Owen B. Brennan had received payoffs from employers for special favors. He threatened to sue Counsel Kennedy if Kennedy continued attacking the Teamsters for collaboration with alleged Communist-dominated unions. He also told the Committee to "ask Brennan" about several matters Hoffa said he didn't recall and about which Brennan had just invoked the Fifth Amendment.

Invoking the Fifth Amendment July 14: Teamster officials Owen B. Brennan, Walter Schuler and Roland McMaster, who declined to answer questions on whether contracts negotiated by Hoffa with Trans-American Truck Lines of Detroit were a "sell-out" of the union members. Hoffa said McMaster had told him the Trans-American contracts had been ratified by the union members, but Counsel Kennedy said they had not been.

In a July 15 statement summarizing two and a half years of Committee investigation of the Teamsters, McClellan said Hoffa and his "racketeer, in some instances gangster, associates continue to do business...in the same arrogant and defiant way."

BRIBE CHARGE DENIED

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- July 23 -- Crum filed with the Committee a sworn affidavit denying that his July 13 testimony had implied a bribe offer by Williams. Crum said he "would like the record to show that no inference should be drawn from the conversation between" him and Williams that the "non-appearance" of Crum before the Committee "was a condition precedent to the payment of Mr. Schmidt's fees as monitor." McClellan said the affidavit emphasized "the necessity... for the Justice Department to pursue the matter with a view of determining who committed perjury."

July 27 -- Hoffa confirmed reports that he planned to sue Counsel Kennedy for libel as a result of charges made by Kennedy on television programs July 22 and 26.

Teamster Monitors

The running battle between the Teamsters Union and court-appointed board of monitors continued in 1959, with the monitors winning a major victory when the Supreme Court in November refused to review Teamster appeals challenging lower court decisions on the power of the board of monitors. The background and chief events in the legal battle during 1959:

October 1957 -- Hoffa was elected Teamster president to succeed Dave Beck, but 13 rank-and-file members of the union brought a court suit to prevent him from taking office, alleging the election was rigged.

Jan. 31, 1958 -- Under a consent agreement between the union and the rank-and-file members, Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts permitted Hoffa to take office but appointed a three-member board of monitors to watch over Teamster affairs for at least one year and recommend clean-up actions. At the end of the clean-up, and no sooner than a year from the consent order, the union was to hold a convention to elect officers and the monitors board was to go out of existence. Board members: retired Judge Nathan Clayton, chairman; Godfred P. Schmidt, representing the rank-and-file members; and L.N.D. (Nat) Wells, representing the union. (Clayton resigned May 14, 1958 and was replaced as chairman by Martin F. O'Donoghue; Wells was replaced March 18, 1959 by Daniel B. Maher; Schmidt was replaced July 13, 1959 by Lawrence T. Smith.)

Dec. 11, 1958 -- Following disputes between the union and the monitors over monitor jurisdiction, and an announcement by Hoffa that the union would hold a March 1959 convention in Chicago to reelect Hoffa and thereby pave the way for dissolution of the board of monitors, Judge Letts ruled that the Teamsters were "obliged to comply" with monitor recommendations. He ordered the proposed convention cancelled and said the Teamsters could not hold a convention without his permission.

Jan. 9, 1959 -- Hoffa cancelled the convention, saying there was insufficient time to elect delegates.

Feb. 9 -- Letts issued a final decree on his Dec. 11 decision. A modification of the original consent order, it gave the monitors power to compel the Teamsters to make "reasonable" reforms.

ORDER UPHELD

June 10 -- A U.S. court of appeals unanimously upheld Judge Letts' Feb. 9 modification of the original consent order, which had been appealed by the Teamsters. The court upheld Letts' refusal to permit the new convention and election until he and the monitors were satisfied with Teamster clean-up efforts.

The circuit court also said the monitors' clean-up orders to the union were not self-enforcing, but that the monitors could seek orders from Letts requiring the union to fulfill the monitors' recommendations. It ordered the Teamsters to obey these recommendations already made by the monitors: Take action against Raymond J. Cohen as officer of Local 107, Philadelphia; suspend John J. McNamara as president of Local 295 and secretary-treasurer of Local 808, both New York, and audit Local 808's books; audit the books of Local 245, Springfield, Mo.; take various other clean-up actions.

In an appendix to its opinion, the circuit court reviewed the initial consent decree and summarized obligations imposed on the Teamsters by it, including guarantees of rights of individual union members, establishment of uniform bylaws and fiduciary standards and rules against conflicts of interest and reprisals.

The circuit court ruled that Godfrey P. Schmidt, in serving as a monitor, was in conflict of interest because he also was attorney for some employers dealing with the union. It did not order Schmidt removed, however, and specified that the conflict of interest finding was not meant to imply that Schmidt had not conducted himself "lawfully, in good conscience and openly." Schmidt, however, resigned June 26 and was replaced July 13 by Lawrence T. Smith, who said he would seek Hoffa's removal from office.

Aug. 27 -- Five union members filed an affidavit in U.S. District Court asking the removal of the monitors' chairman, Martin F. O'Donoghue, and of member Lawrence T. Smith on grounds they were "attempting to serve two masters." They said O'Donoghue also was acting as an attorney for the AFL-CIO Plumbers Union and Smith was representing several large chain restaurants in Teamster dealings.

Aug. 31 -- Hoffa informed the monitors he had taken steps to carry out their Aug. 13 request that he shift more than $500,000 in union funds from non-interest-bearing banks to accounts paying interest.

Sept. 2 -- The monitors asked Hoffa to remove from office immediately the presidents of three locals -- Joseph Glimco of Chicago, Harold Gross of Miami Beach and Anthony Provenzano of Hoboken, N.J. The monitors recommended the three be put on trial before union boards on the basis of charges of alleged shakedowns and extortion developed during Senate hearings. (See Teamster hearings, above, and Effects of Labor Law, below)

(Hoffa told a Sept. 28 news conference he had no intention of bringing union ouster action against the three and that written answers to the charges had been made, based on the individuals' statements.

(Provenzano, also president of Teamsters Joint Council of New Jersey, July 29 was indicted in Jersey City on two charges of accepting bribes from truckers. Gross Oct. 22 pleaded innocent in New York to charges he had failed to pay taxes on $29,000, most of which the Government charged he extorted from the Hearst Publishing Co.)

HOFFA'S REMOVAL SOUGHT

Sept. 14 -- The monitors, in an interim report filed with Judge Letts, asked for a court order to remove Hoffa from the Teamster presidency, charging him with misusing hundreds of thousands of dollars of union funds in a Florida land development project and other transactions. They said Hoffa had violated his "fiduciary" obligations to protect union funds and was involved in a conflict of interests.

The union member of the monitors board, Daniel B. Maher, Oct. 9 filed a dissenting minority report stating that the request for Hoffa's removal was based on unproven testimony and requesting that the report be returned with instructions that Hoffa be asked to explain the transactions.

Oct. 2 -- The monitors reported to Judge Letts that Hoffa had refused to follow their recommendations for election procedure reforms, and asked the court to order their adoption. At an Oct. 22 hearing on the complaint, the union agreed to adopt the proposed regulations. Under a court agreement, the union said it would: adopt proposed rules for 51 locals under trusteeship and permit an independent group, the Honest Ballot Assn., to oversee elections; recommend "speediest possible adoption" of a similar set of rules by self-governing locals and postpone elections in cases where the rules had not been considered beforehand; direct all locals not to disqualify anyone from voting or running for office for late payment of dues merely because the employer who checked off the dues was late in sending them to the union.

Both the union and the monitors agreed they would decide after the first 12 elections in the trusteeship group whether to continue using an outside supervisory agency.

Nov. 16 -- The Supreme Court refused to hear Teamster appeals challenging both the original consent order by Judge Letts and his Feb. 9 modification of it.

The Court also refused to hear the appeal of John Cunningham, former head of the 13-member rank-and-file group, challenging the original consent order on grounds it was deficient because all union members allegedly were not notified of the terms of the order before it went into effect.

Monitor Chairman O'Donoghue Nov. 16 said, "We will move fast now -- the last legal roadblock is out of the way." The monitors' program called for removal of Hoffa as president of the union for alleged misuse of funds; expulsion of Hoffa and Teamster Vice President Owen B. Brennan on charges of misuse of funds; installation of new auditing procedures and procedures for safeguarding rights of rank-and-file members, including honest elections; release of many local unions from trusteeship.

Nov. 24 -- Judge Letts authorized the monitors to subpena witnesses and take sworn statements in their inquiry into an alleged misuse of funds by Hoffa. The monitors specifically wanted authority to investigate a $500,000 deposit Hoffa's home Local 299 placed in a non-interest-bearing account in the Florida National Bank in Orlando early in 1955. The monitors said the deposit was security for a loan to Sun Valley Inc., a real estate venture in which Hoffa had an interest. Only $100,000 of the loan had been repaid, they said.

Effects of the 1959 Labor Law

At year's end, the Teamsters Union was in trouble with at least two facets of the new labor reform law enacted earlier in the year. (See p. 156)

BONDING -- The law required all union officials who handle union funds to be bonded in amounts up to $500,000. Select Committee Chairman McClellan Dec. 17 released a letter to Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell charging that Hoffa and the union's executive board "have been actively attempting to deliver the lucrative business of bonding Teamster officials throughout the country" to a bonding agency allegedly linked with Chicago racketeers. McClellan named the agency as the Summit Fidelity and Surety Co. of Akron, Ohio.

UNION DEMOCRACY -- The Teamsters also were involved in what was apparently the first test of the union democracy provisions of the 1959 law. Anthony Provenzano, president of Teamsters Local 560 in northern New Jersey, Nov. 12 agreed to a court settlement that gave rank-and-file rebels of his local representation on the union election committee and postponed the local's triennial election from December to mid-January to make it subject to the new law. Provenzano also agreed that the balloting would be governed by clean election rules drawn up by the board of monitors, as well as by the law's union democracy provisions.

EARLIER LEGAL ACTIONS

Several Teamster leaders figured in 1959 court actions growing out of earlier McClellan Committee hearings. Two cases involved former Teamster President Dave Beck.

Beck Feb. 27 was sentenced to five years in prison and fined $60,000 for evading $240,000 in Federal income taxes in 1950-53. Beck, who claimed the money was borrowed from the union and was not subject to taxes, appealed his conviction. He said the Select Committee had created so much publicity unfavorable to him that it was impossible for him to win a fair trial.

In the other case, Beck and two trucking company executives -- Roy Fruehauf of Fruehauf Trailer Co. and Burge M. Seymour of Associated Transport Inc. -- June 17 were indicted on charges growing out of the alleged payment -- or loan -- of $200,000 to Beck by the other two men. (1957 Almanac p. 780)

Robert B. (Barney) Baker of St. Louis, representative of the Central Conference of Teamsters, was indicted in a Pittsburgh, Pa., court Sept. 21 for allegedly receiving $525 from the president of a Pittsburgh film and freight distributing firm in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. (1958 Almanac p. 678-79)

Two former Teamster officials were convicted in New York Sept. 10 on charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice by hiding records sought by a special grand jury. Those convicted were Joseph Curcio, former secretary-treasurer of Teamster Local 269 and also ex-president of AFL Local 649, United Auto Workers, whose charter later was revoked; and George Baker, former organizer of Teamster Local 269, which was described by the Government as a "paper" local existing solely for union racketeering.

Coin Machines, Gambling

The Select Committee Feb. 10-June 11 held a series of hearings on coin machine and gambling rackets in various areas.

Chicago, New York

The Committee Feb. 10-25 held hearings on jukebox rackets in Chicago and New York.

Milton Hammergren, former general sales manager and vice president of the Wurlitzer Co., Feb. 10 said his firm had to deal with racketeers to sell its machines. Hammergren said he joined Wurlitzer in 1926, in 1939 succeeded Sen. Capehart as sales manager, and was currently "semi-retired." He said his connections with an Al Goldberg, since deceased, who was "well connected with the underworld," led to his sale of 550 jukeboxes to Chicago mobsters, for "close to half a million dollars," in the early 1940s. One of those with whom he dealt was Jake (Greasy Thumb) Guzik, a member of the old Al Capone gang, he said. He said his company didn't condone the violence in jukebox trade wars, but that "that's one of the liabilities of the business." He said underworld help in sales came from such people as Meyer Lansky, a gambler; Angelo Meli of Detroit, and Frank (Buster) Wortman of St. Louis, all described by the Committee as racketeers.

(Sen. Capehart, contacted by telephone in Indiana concerning Hammergren's testimony, Feb. 11 said he knew nothing of any racketeering deals during his career at Wurlitzer's, and that "we did a tremendous business without that kind of thing." Capehart said he had not been notified of the hearings.)

Arthur Kaplan, a Committee lawyer, said a "conservative" estimate was that $300 million went through 500,000 jukebox slots annually. Chairman McClellan said the annual revenue from vending machines, exclusive of pinball machines and other amusement devices, reached about $2 billion.

On Feb. 11, Theodore Blatt, attorney for the Associated Amusement Machine Operators of New York, said jukebox operators were forced to sign union contracts because they were "very vulnerable" to union pressure.

Milton Green, a Brooklyn and Coney Island coin machine operator, said Teamsters Local 266 in New York was run by gangsters, and he was ambushed and beaten about seven months earlier because he opposed a contract with the local.

In answer to questions on their coin machine business connections, the following witnesses took the Fifth Amendment: John Vitale, St. Louis, Mo.; Frank Zito, Springfield, Ill.; Mike Genovese, Gibsonia, Pa.; and Joseph Salardino, Denver, Colo.

The Committee heard testimony that "phony" unions were attempting to control the New York vending machine industry for extortion purposes.

Albert S. Denver, president of the Music Operators of New York, Inc., Feb. 13 said his group, which operated 8,000 of New York's 11,000 jukeboxes, was "frantically in need of help," and that Teamsters Local 266 had been the chief troublemaker in the past year through its efforts to control the field.

The Committee was told that one of the purposes of the mysterious 1957 "crime convention" at Apalachin, N.Y., was to commute the gangland death sentence of a man who allegedly overstepped prescribed bounds in his jukebox business activities. The man, Carmine Lombardozzi, identified as a Brooklyn racketeer, was fined $10,000, according to Feb. 12 testimony by Lt. James S. Mooney of the New York City criminal intelligence squad. Another witness, Benjamin Gottlieb, head of a Brooklyn vending machine firm, described alleged shakedown payments to Lombardozzi to "protect" his business. (1958 Almanac p. 676)

Charles Bernoff, described by the Committee as the third largest jukebox operator in New York City, was also described as being involved in a "shylocking" operation in which money was loaned to mobsters and racketeers at interest rates as high as 198 percent.

PHONOGRAPH RECORD RACKET

Hearings on Chicago jukebox activities centered on the use of counterfeit records -- low cost reproductions of recordings, topped by counterfeit labels to make them appear as products of reputable firms, upon which no royalties were paid. Named as a counterfeit record distributor was the Lormar Distributing Co. of Chicago, which Kennedy said was owned by Charles (Chuck) English, whom he identified as a lieutenant of Chicago racketeer Sam (Mooney) Giancana. Kennedy Feb. 20 said Lormar began counterfeit record distribution after it intimidated jukebox operators into buying its records for five cents apiece above the price charged by other distributors. He said Lormar was kept in business by distributing firms for some of the biggest record companies, despite its alleged counterfeit record operations. McClellan Feb. 21 told newsmen, "The people who sell records to the Lormar company are now alerted to the character of its operations and the Committee will be interested in what action, if any, they take." He said record manufacturers would be justified in refusing to sell to such an outfit.

The co-owner of a Chicago wholesale record firm, Ted Sipiora, Feb. 20 said counterfeit labels were a major part of manipulations which ruined his business. He also said that his customers, the jukebox operators, started doing business with Lormar after being threatened with picketing by Local 134, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO). He told of alleged implied shooting threats and other pressures, "six or seven years ago," by John Ambrosia, ex-manager for singer Tommy Leonetti, to force wide use of the singer's records. Kennedy said Leonetti had told him in an interview he did not know at the time of Ambrosia's underworld connections.

A Committee investigator Feb. 20 said a Chicago mobster-union combine collected more than $100,000 annually as the price for letting jukebox operators keep their machines in taverns, restaurants and other locations. Counsel Kennedy Feb. 25 said he believed there were "bad situations" in some cities, where police were "almost under the control of undesirable elements." As the hearings ended, after numerous witnesses pleaded the Fifth Amendment, McClellan called on Congress to enact corrective legislation.

Rackets in Other Cities

The Committee March 23 began three days of hearings on coin machine operations in New Orleans, Los Angeles and Miami. Counsel Kennedy said the inquiry was designed to illustrate the coast-to-coast nature of underworld efforts to move in on jukebox and vending machine operators.

Aaron Kohn, leader of a New Orleans citizens' crime fighting group, told the Committee that key racket figures dominated the Louisiana coin machine business through threats, coercion and alliances with corrupt public officials. He said that a "Mafia" mob headed by Carlos Marcello enjoyed police protection in Jefferson Parish and operated in Texas, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri and Arkansas. Kohn said that Jefferson Parish Sheriff William Coci had led "a very aggressive, anti-good government movement."

Marcello invoked the Fifth Amendment.

On March 24, racketeer Mickey Cohen refused to tell the Committee whether he and a Fred Sica had been paid $11,000 by the head of a cigarette vending machine company to stay out of a Los Angeles business war.

A Miami jukebox and pinball machine mechanic, Leonard Baitler, March 25 testified that Charles Karpf "was the man behind" an alleged racketeer move to control Miami's jukebox industry through alliances with labor unions. Similar testimony was given by two coin machine operators. Karpf and Joseph (Joe Scootch) Indellicato pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

DETROIT HEARINGS

From April 7-15, the committee heard testimony indicating that both labor and management in the Detroit coin-machine industry were infiltrated by racketeers. Several witnesses said they had made payoffs to and received bribe offers from Hoffa and other Teamster Union Officials.

Witnesses also described William Bufalino, head of Detroit Teamsters Local 985, as having left a jukebox business partnership with an alleged member of the "Mafia" crime organization to become head of the local. Several witnesses charged he had used his union position to discriminate in favor of jukebox companies allegedly backed by the underworld. Other witnesses April 10-11 charged that Bufalino had negotiated "sweetheart" contracts that cut the wages of some Detroit car washers.

Bufalino testified April 14-15 in response to the charges, but Committee members April 15 said he had avoided real answers to their questions by making long, rambling statements. Bufalino said the Committee did not give him enough time to answer the testimony against him. He refused to say under oath whether he had negotiated the car wash "sweetheart" contracts.

In the course of the hearings, three witnesses took the Fifth Amendment against possible self-incrimination. They were: Eugene C. (Jimmy) James, former head of Local 985 currently on trial in Chicago for tax evasion and embezzlement, who refused to answer questions on his alleged connections with racketeering in the Detroit coin-operated machine industry; John Priziola, who refused to answer questions by Committee Counsel Robert F. Kennedy as to whether he was "one of the main traffickers in narcotics in the United States;" Mrs. Eleanor Petz, secretary for Local 985, who refused to answer questions about the local's bookkeeping.

UNDERWORLD INFLUENCE IN INDIANA

From June 2-11, the Committee held a series of hearings on alleged collusion between Chicago underworld figures and public officials in Lake and Porter Counties, Ind., in setting up gambling and vice rackets. Chief figure in the investigation was Metro Holovachka, former Lake County public prosecutor (1952-58) and currently deputy prosecutor, whom several witnesses charged with helping a gambling syndicate to drive independent pinball machine operators out of business. Committee investigators June 4 said Holovachka had paid more than $43,000 for a home in small amounts of cash during 1955 and 1956. As prosecutor, his salary was $12,000 yearly.

Holovachka June 8 said the Committee was going beyond its authority in investigating his finances. In June 9 testimony, he said he might have received hundreds of dollars worth of Christmas gifts from pinball gamblers his office allegedly protected, without knowing from whom the gifts came. He refused to tell the source of $327,724 in cash the Committee said had passed through his hands since 1952. (Holovachka resigned as prosecutor June 15.)

In June 3 hearings, Harold Rayder, deputy sheriff of Porter County, said Tommy Morgano, a Chicago gangster, had offered about $500,000 in bribes to police officials for protection of gambling and vice operations. Morgano was operating as an agent for Chicago underworld figure, Sam Giancanna, Rayder said. Morgano invoked the Fifth Amendment, as did Giancanna June 9.

Seven other witnesses pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

New York Newspapers

The Committee held a closed-door hearing in New York City March 9 on the system of newspaper and magazine delivery in the New York metropolitan area. Chairman McClellan said the hearing "was not an investigation" of the deliverymen's strike that shut nine New York newspapers Dec. 9-28, 1958. He said the hearing involved "all aspects of the matters we have been looking into -- collusion, sweetheart contracts, improper payments, misuses of union funds, false entry in records."

The Committee followed up the March 9 hearing with open hearings May 5-7.

Ted Thackrey, former publisher of the now defunct New York Compass, May 5 said he had paid $10,000 in 1949 to settle a labor dispute with the Newspaper and Mail Deliverers' Union of New York and Vicinity, an unaffiliated union. Irving Bitz, president of a Bronx County newspaper distributorship and an alleged underworld figure, and Joseph Simons, former president of the union, invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked whether they received the money from the Compass.

PAYOFFS CHARGED

A Committee investigator May 5 testified that New York City's largest wholesale newspaper distributor, the Metropolitan News Co., charged off $107,718 on income tax returns for gift and traveling expenses. Harold Weinstock, secretary of the firm, invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked whether the money went for payoffs to the deliverers' union. Eight other officials of New York distributing firms took the Fifth Amendment in answer to questions about making payoffs to the union. Four union officials, including its outgoing president, Samuel Feldman, also took the Fifth Amendment when asked whether they had received payoffs. May 6 hearings brought Fifth Amendment pleas from 12 more union officials on questions concerning alleged payoffs of at least $400,000 by employers as a price for labor peace.

Officials of the Neo Gravure Printing Co., Weehawken, N.J., May 6 testified they had paid $259,836 to a convicted labor extortionist, Harold Gross, and to members of his family over the past 14 years, to assure labor peace. A Committee investigator said Gross, Cornelius Noonan, president of a New York longshoremen's union local, and relatives of Gross received $307,136 from the company which prints Sunday supplements for several newspapers.

Amory H. Bradford, vice president and business manager of the New York Times, May 6 said his newspaper paid thousands of dollars in tribute so that delivery of its Sunday sections from a commercial printing plant would not be blocked by the deliverers' strike. Warren Kelly, advertising director of the New York Mirror, said his newspaper also made payments to assure deliveries of supplements from the Neo Gravure Printing Co.

Gross and Noonan were called before the Committee May 7. Both pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

United Auto Workers

Committee Republicans, who had been pressing for an investigation of the United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO), finally succeeded in setting up hearings on the union Aug. 12-Sept. 9. The hearings, conducted largely by the GOP members and their counsel, were reminiscent of the Committee's 1958 hearings on the UAW strike against the Kohler Plumbing Fixture Co. (1958 Almanac p. 681)

The Committee held closed sessions on the UAW Aug. 11, 12 and 13 but later released the testimony to the public. UAW President Walter P. Reuther Aug. 10 urged Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) to "open to the public the star chamber proceedings involving our union...planned by Republican members" of the Committee.

Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), vice chairman of the Committee, said it was customary to hold preliminary executive hearings as a prelude to public hearings, and that he believed the closed sessions should go on as scheduled. The Committee Aug. 11 voted 2-5 to reject a motion by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) to open the hearings. On Aug. 18, however, the Committee agreed to hold further hearings on the UAW in public session and to release the earlier closed-session testimony.

Highlights of the testimony received in executive session, released Aug. 19:

John D. Dale, head of the George Elliott Co., a management consultant firm, said his company secretly paid Peter Zvara, a UAW official, $19,666 in 1956 and $14,296 in 1957 as commission for Zvara's help in inducing industrial plants with which the union had contracts to hire the Elliott company to make efficiency studies. Zvara, of Toledo, Ohio, was a UAW international representative and an assistant to senior vice president Richard T. Gosser. He was fired from his job early in 1959.

PAYMENTS DESCRIBED

Dale said his company also had paid around $6,000 to Edward Swannie, an International Assn. of Machinists (AFL-CIO) representative. He said the company's records also showed that some payments were made to Ernest H. Love, another former Toledo UAW representative but that he did not know the amount.

Both Zvara and Love, who were involved in a New York grand jury investigation of the alleged payments, invoked Fifth Amendment protection against possible self-incrimination when questioned about the matter. Zvara also refused to answer questions on whether he had split the money with others in Toledo, including Gosser.

Gosser said he knew nothing of the payments at the time they were made and that he did not receive any of the money. Sen. Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), who directed the UAW inquiry, told Gosser the Committee had checks amounting to over $60,000 and asked him who had received the balance between that amount and the amount paid to Zvara. Gosser replied that the Senator should ask Zvara, who had already pleaded the Fifth Amendment to the question.

In open hearings Aug. 20-21, the Committee heard the testimony of Jesse F. Motsinger of Detroit, a former UAW international representative. Motsinger Aug. 20 said he had to make regular $2 weekly contributions to the union's political action fund to hold his job. Under questioning, Motsinger said he never had protested the payments and never had been told directly that he would be dismissed if he did not contribute. Motsinger also said he made $5-a-week contributions to an intra-union political chest, known as the "flower fund," in addition to the amount he paid into the political action fund.

In Aug. 21 testimony, Motsinger said he was dismissed from his job in 1955 because he had attempted to expose "what I thought was corruption" by some other union officials. He said he had learned that Gosser had encouraged international representatives on his staff to submit false reports to union headquarters at Detroit.

Following the Aug. 21 hearings, Reuther's assistant, Jack Conway, and UAW Counsel Joseph L. Rauh accused Sens. Curtis and Mundt of waging a "political vendetta" against the UAW and Reuther in order to win reelection to the Senate in 1960. Conway said the news conference called by him and Rauh was "the only way the UAW has to defend itself" against charges which he said were false.

When the hearings resumed Sept. 8, Counsel Kennedy formally disclaimed any part in the inquiry, saying it was "the worst situation I've ever seen," and "completely unfair" because testimony never was fully checked for accuracy. Curtis told Kennedy the situation was unusual because "we had to do this one by ourselves."

Chairman McClellan said he would ask the Justice Department to try to discover who had lied under oath during the hearings. His decision came after receipt from the UAW of sworn affidavits by individuals denying Aug. 20-21 testimony by Motsinger.

John A. Bolman of Toledo, Ohio, ex-UAW international representative, testified that supporters of UAW Vice President Richard Gosser gave him a severe beating when he demanded an accounting of some union funds, that he filed a series of court suits against Gosser and the union and then was expelled for failing to follow union procedures.

Under questioning by Kennedy, Bolman said he filed the suits after being approached by Toledo attorney H.P. Ells and that he believed legal fees involved were paid by Paul Block, publisher of the Toledo Blade. Kennedy said two investigators went to Toledo and Ells admitted to them that "these charges were all a fraud," but that they were brought "because the employers wanted to ruin the pension plan in Toledo."

On Sept. 9, Robert Manuel, counsel for Republican Committee members, said he had talked to Ells and Ells denied Kennedy's statement.

Conflicting testimony was given by Randolph Gray, former UAW financial secretary in Toledo's Local 12, and Lowell Goerlich, an attorney. Gray said he had seen Goerlich, then representing the UAW, destroy some union records in 1950 that figured in a court suit. Goerlich denied it and said Gray was "suffering from a mental disturbance at the time."

Gray said he had been pressured to lie about dishonest union financial transactions, and "I cracked up... I was just exhausted from the pressure."

McClellan, bringing the hearings to an end, said he felt much evidence at the UAW inquiry was old, that the Committee had served its purpose and should not be continued any longer. Curtis and Mundt said the inquiry showed the need for a "thorough-going" study of the UAW.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Nov. 12 -- After removing Gosser from control of its organizing activities, the UAW Nov. 20 ordered him to take a leave of absence.

REGULATORY AGENCIES

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Jan. 3 released a report based on two years of study of the Federal regulatory agencies that made headlines with charges of influence-peddling by agency members and White House official Sherman Adams. (1957 Almanac p. 792; 1958 Almanac p. 687)

The report (H Rept 2711), submitted by the Committee's Special Legislative Oversight Subcommittee, made detailed legislative recommendations designed "to promote fair and efficient administration of the law" by the six major independent agencies. They are: Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission and Civil Aeronautics Board.

Later in the year there were both House and Senate hearings on the administrative practices of the agencies.

Highlights of the Jan. 3 House report:

● GENERAL RECOMMENDATIONS -- Recommendations applying to all six agencies:

Congress should enact a code of ethics for commissioners, employees of the commissions and persons appearing before them, to be enforced by civil and criminal sanctions.

Unauthorized ex parte and extra-record communications attempting to influence commission decisions should be banned, with civil and criminal penalties.

Letters and oral requests to the commissions from Members of Congress or persons in the Executive Branch should be made part of the public record.

Where law required a case to be decided on the record, all written or oral communications dealing with it should be made part of the record.

All letters and memoranda to and from a commission on any matter in its jurisdiction should be considered official communications and placed in official files, with unauthorized removal banned.

Persons appearing before a commission in any capacity in any case should be required to give written explanation of their interest in the case, and unofficial interviews and talks should be recorded in the file on the case.

Persons aiding others to make ex parte contacts should be liable to civil and criminal penalties.

A commission should be given power to enforce its own rules for ethical conduct through administrative and civil sanctions.

Unauthorized disclosure of information about a case by commissioners and commission employees should be made liable to civil and criminal penalties.

As a matter of right, each commission should be permitted to participate in judicial proceedings involving the statute it administers.

Commissions should be required to grant or deny motions in cases before them within 60 days.

The chairman of each commission should be elected by the commission members, for a term of not over three years.

The President should be authorized by law to remove any commission member for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

In each case before it, a commission should be required by law to appoint one of its members to write a signed decision.

● SPECIFIC RECOMMENDATIONS -- FCC -- Bar direct or indirect payoffs and "swap-offs" between applicants competing for the same license. Bar trafficking in licenses. Repeal a clause in the Communications Act of 1934 that forbids the FCC to consider whether the public interest would be served by transferring a license. Require public hearings before issuance of any television license.

CAB -- Give the CAB power to assign international air routes. The President could veto an assignment within 90 days but "in no case shall the President direct appointment of a particular carrier." Give the CAB authority to regulate property and passenger rates in foreign air transportation.

SEC -- Require the SEC to move immediately against companies that file false or misleading reports or refuse to file.

FPC -- Require persons wishing to build and operate hydroelectric projects requiring FPC licenses to apply for the license within a year of starting work.

ICC -- Require the ICC, when approving issuance of stock by a carrier, to state the purpose for which the proceeds may be used.

FTC -- Impose civil penalties for labeling-law violations, which are illegal because they are an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive practice, and require the FTC to institute proceedings to recover such penalties.

● FUTURE INVESTIGATIONS -- The Subcommittee said further legislative inquiry by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was needed on the activities not only of the six major regulatory agencies but also of other independent and semi-independent Federal agencies.

● CONCLUSIONS -- The Subcommittee said Congress "must see to it that the regulatory agencies are not permitted to be...a headless fourth branch of the Government." It said improper pressures on the agencies must be prevented lest the agencies "be converted into Washington branch offices of the regulated industry or instruments of over-aggressive seekers of special privileges." The Subcommittee said appointment of men "of unquestioned ability and character" would be "one of the most effective steps" in raising standards on the commissions. Finally, it said Congress should consider creating more precise policy standards to guide commissioners in deciding cases. "It is not enough to tell a commission that its decisions must be in the public interest, convenience and necessity," the Subcommittee said.

● ADDITIONAL VIEWS -- Three members filed separate views. Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.) said he agreed with the majority recommendations but believed the portions of testimony and summaries of investigations included in H Rept 2711 singled out some persons for condemnation while failing to mention others equally guilty of impropriety. He did not mention any names. Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) said he could not endorse the majority views. He said the Subcommittee staff had been "heavily overbalanced," had assumed "free wheeling authority to run the investigation, to 'leak' or 'feed' stories to the press." He said no proceedings for violation of the law or contempt of Congress ever had been started against former Subcommittee Counsel Bernard Schwartz for seizing Subcommittee records and leaking information. O'Hara also said the Subcommittee recommendations had been too broad for the evidence on which they were based; major recommendations for changes in procedure, he said, had been based on one or two incidents.

(Wolverton and O'Hara had become ex-Congressmen when the report was filed.)

John B. Bennett (R Mich.) said he agreed in general with the Subcommittee's recommendations, but that the report had a "political flavor," concentrating on Bernard Goldfine and Sherman Adams and ignoring the activities of Democrats.

Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), chairman of both the full Committee and the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee, Feb. 19 introduced a bill (HR 4800) embodying the legislative recommendations made by the Subcommittee. No action was taken on the bill in 1959.

Panel Discussions

The Subcommittee June 15 began eight days of panel discussions with representatives of the six major regulatory agencies to examine administrative problems. Chairman Harris, in a July 16 progress report on the Subcommittee's work, said panel participants gave these reasons for the agencies' "inability to dispose expeditiously of their workloads": inadequate personnel, cumbersome hearing procedures, excessive intra-agency review of hearing findings, obstructionism by parties, inefficient and bureaucratic staff work, unnecessary formalism, inadequate internal separation of functions, and hearing examiners' lack of authority to control the record.

The regulatory agencies were criticized Sept. 22 by Louis J. Hector, who resigned Sept. 16 as a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board. In a report to President Eisenhower, Hector urged "basic and radical reorganization" of agency functions, said policy-making and administrative functions should be transferred to executive departments.

Court Actions

As aftermaths of the Subcommittee's 1958 hearings, legal actions were taken against three witnesses -- former FCC Commissioner Richard A. Mack, Miami lawyer Thurman A. Whiteside and Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine.

Mack and Whiteside were accused of conspiring to swing a four-way contest for Miami TV Channel 10 to Public Service Television Inc., a National Airlines subsidiary. A 14-week trial ended July 10 in a deadlocked jury but a second trial was scheduled. (1958 Almanac p.688)

Goldfine, indicted in 1958 for contempt of Congress for failure to answer 18 questions on his business dealings, July 24 received a suspended maximum sentence of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine. He was placed on two years' probation on condition he answer the disputed questions if recalled by the Subcommittee. Also on July 24, the U.S. Court of Appeals in Boston upheld a December 1958 three-month contempt of court sentence against Goldfine and a 10-day sentence against his bookkeeper, Miss Mildred Paperman, for failing to produce certain records sought by the Internal Revenue Service. (1958 Almanac p. 698)

Goldfine in December 1958 had pleaded innocent to the contempt charge, but on July 16 he placed himself at the mercy of the court, pleading nolo contendere. U.S. District Court Judge James W. Morris said the change in plea amounted to a "complete vindication" of the Subcommittee.

Goldfine Dec. 9 appeared in closed session before the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee. Chairman Harris said Goldfine "undertook to answer all the 18 questions involved," answered "a good many forthrightly," and others "not as fully." Harris said Goldfine invoked the Fifth Amendment on a new question concerning "the real parties of interest" in a mortgage transaction involving the Little Building in Boston and the Boston Port Development Co., both of which he was believed to control.

TV CHANNEL 5 CASE

An FCC special examiner Sept. 23 reported that no improper influence had been brought to bear on the FCC in connection with its 1957 award of Boston TV Channel 5 to a subsidiary of the Boston Herald-Traveler Corp.

The FCC in December 1958 authorized the inquiry as an outgrowth of the Goldfine-Sherman Adams hearings. During the hearings, Rep. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) said the Subcommittee had information of influence in the award. The FCC examiner was retired Chief Justice Horace Stern of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. (1958 Almanac p. 691, 699)

Senate Hearings

The Senate Judiciary, Administrative Practice and Procedure Subcommittee held hearings in July and November on proposals to insure fair procedures in regulatory agencies. The three-member Subcommittee was set up after the Senate Feb. 2 authorized $115,000 for a study, to be completed Jan. 31, 1960, of procedures in Federal agencies with quasi-judicial functions. Members: Sens. John A. Carroll (D Colo.), Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Philip A. Hart (D Mich.).

TESTIMONY -- July 21 -- Subcommittee Chairman Carroll said the hearings would be confined at first to Title I of the Hennings (D Mo.)-Wiley (R Wis.) bill (S 600) and to S 2374, introduced by Carroll at the request of the American Bar Assn.

Title I of S 600 set up a Federal Administrative Practice Office, to make continuing studies and recommendations on administrative hearing procedures. S 2374 required quasi-judicial Federal agencies to base their decisions solely on evidence put in the hearing record in proceedings before them; made it a crime for a member of such an agency or a party to a proceeding to receive or offer surreptitious or off-the-record communications; and required a member of an administrative agency approached with an off-the-record communication to put it into the hearing record immediately.

John A. Randall, president-elect of the American Bar Assn., and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) endorsed both S 2374 and Title I of S 600. Acting Assistant Attorney General Robert A. Bicks backed the aims of both bills.

July 22 -- Washington attorney Donald C. Beelar supported S 2374. In an exchange with Beelar, Subcommittee member Dirksen said he wanted to make clear he would not support legislation that would prevent him from helping his constituents. Dirksen said that when he wanted information from Federal agencies, he spoke to the highest-ranking person he knew there.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- July 23 -- Attorney General William P. Rogers told a news conference the procedure in quasi-judicial administrative hearings should be the same as in the courts, with "all presentations in behalf of litigants...made publicly and in the presence of other parties involved." He said if any Member of Congress "wants to present his views, he can do it on the record."

AGENCY HEADS TESTIFY

TESTIMONY -- Nov. 19 -- FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer said the best way to "restore public confidence" in regulatory agencies would be legislation to speed up handling of applications; and that delayed decisions usually bred pressures. He supported the "general objective" of S 2374 but questioned its application.

Doerfer said agencies should be free to consult outside experts on rule-making and that any legislation should be aimed at "intent" to influence and not penalize those making innocent inquiries.

Chairman Edward N. Gadsby of the Securities and Exchange Commission agreed with Doerfer that queries from Congressmen were not a problem and that if they covered subjects in the hearing stage they simply were not discussed. Both said only Congressional written queries, not phone calls, were put in the public file.

George W. Abbott, Interior Department general counsel, said the bill was too tightly written, and Charles W. Bucy, assistant general counsel of the Agriculture Department, said it conflicted with the Administrative Procedure Act on what made up a "record."

Nov. 20 -- Chairman Earl W. Kintner of the Federal Trade Commission said agencies should tailor rules to their own needs, but if Congress did legislate, the FTC would be glad to help work out a bill that would not be "unduly restrictive."

Chairman Kenneth H. Tuggle of the Interstate Commerce Commission said S 2374 would rob agencies of necessary "flexibility and informality." Chairman Jerome K. Kuykendall of the Federal Power Commission said the bill needed clarification, but he endorsed its aims.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Two bills affecting regulatory agencies were passed by the Senate and referred to the House Commerce Committee in 1959. One (S 1965 -- S Rept 471), passed July 29, would permit commissioners of the FCC and FPC to remain in office, after their terms expired, until their successors were sworn in. FPC Chairman Kuykendall's between-reappointment salary had been challenged. (1958 Almanac p. 335)

Before S 1965 was reported, the Senate Commerce Committee deleted a provision that would empower the President to remove FCC and FPC commissioners for cause.

The second Senate bill (S 1735 -- S Rept 688), passed Aug. 21, would prohibit FCC members from accepting fees for speeches or published articles. Chairman Doerfer had told the House Subcommittee in 1958 that he was paid for speeches before communications groups. (1958 Almanac p. 687, 689)

TV QUIZ SHOWS

The most publicized Congressional hearings of 1959 covered rigging of television quiz programs. Testifying before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee's Legislative Oversight Subcommittee were former TV quiz contestants who had won fame because of their large winnings. They admitted to receiving questions and answers in advance, being told when to lose and being coached on mannerisms. Quiz producers and advertising executives were involved in the charges. The hearings reached a climax when Charles Van Doren, who had become the most famous contestant through his appearances on "Twenty-One," admitted he had won his $129,000 through rigging.

Hearing disclosures led TV industry leaders to promise prompt measures either to cancel or strictly police quiz programs. President Eisenhower in October ordered the Justice Department to study the rigging and report by Jan. 1, 1960. The Federal Communications Commission in December began public hearings on TV broadcasting practices to learn whether some were contrary to the public interest and to re-examine FCC programming powers.

Background

Reports that several television quiz programs were run dishonestly were first made public early in 1958. Following a preliminary investigation into the allegations by the district attorney of New York County, a full-scale investigation was launched by a New York grand jury in August 1958. No indictments were handed down by the grand jury although, during the course of its nine-month investigation, several witnesses who had been contestants on the programs testified that they had been given answers to some of the questions in advance, enabling them to win large sums of money.

Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.) July 31 requested the New York General Sessions Court to release the testimony taken by the grand jury so it could be used by the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee.

The presentment containing the grand jury's findings had been sealed at the conclusion of the investigation by court order. The findings were turned over to the Harris Subcommittee Aug. 4.

House Hearings

TESTIMONY -- Oct. 6 -- Herbert Stempel of New York City, a college student who won $49,500 on the National Broadcasting Co. quiz show "Twenty-One" in 1956, repeated charges he had made to the grand jury that he had received answers in advance and that his performance on the program had been coached and rehearsed. He also testified that Dan Enright, a co-owner of the show, had told him what gestures he was to use during the performance.

Stempel said that Enright had given him an advance of $18,500 and that he had agreed to miss certain questions in his match with Columbia University instructor Charles Van Doren in exchange for an opportunity to appear as a guest on another show and for a $250-a-week job with the producers of "Twenty-One."

Stempel said he had no personal knowledge that either Van Doren, who succeeded him as a regular contestant on the program, or Jack Barry, the master of ceremonies and Enright's co-producer had any part in the plan. Van Doren later became an NBC commentator.

A second contestant, James Snodgrass, who appeared on the show five times in April and May 1957, also testified that his part on the program was worked out in advance. To prove his charges, Snodgrass produced for the Subcommittee a sealed, registered letter, addressed to himself and posted May 11, 1957, in which were contained questions and answers for the May 13 show.

"LIE OR LEAVE TOWN"

Oct. 7 -- Alfred Davis and Arthur Franklin, New York publicity men who worked for Barry-Enright, Inc., producers of "Twenty-One" and "Tic Tac Dough," said that when the grand jury investigation began they were told by Edwin Slote, an attorney representing both them and the show, either "not to tell the truth" or to leave town to avoid testifying. They said Stempel had told them he was receiving questions and answers in advance, that they had discussed the matter with Enright, and he had said "there was nothing he could do about it."

Two former "Twenty-One" contestants, Rose Leibbrand and Richard Jackman, said they had been coached in advance. Miss Leibbrand said she was specifically restricted on the point value of questions she could elect to answer when she appeared on the program in 1956.

Thomas E. Ervin, National Broadcasting Co. vice president and general counsel, said Howard Felsher, producer of "Tic Tac Dough," a quiz show then on the air, was discharged Oct. 2 because he said he could not comply with Ervin's demand for a sworn statement that the show was not rigged.

Oct. 8 -- Three contestants on the "Dotto" quiz show testified they were supplied with questions and answers in advance. One of them, David Huschle, said the show's producers told him competition among quiz shows was so great they had to "insure" the program's success.

(Chairman Harris Oct. 8 said Van Doren had sent the group a telegram denying any part in the "Twenty-One" rigging and requesting an opportunity to be heard, but he had not replied to the Subcommittee's return telegram requesting his appearance within a day or two. A subpena was finally served on Van Doren Oct. 14, ordering him to appear before the Subcommittee Nov. 2.)

Oct. 9 -- Felsher said about 75 percent of the performances on the night version of "Tic Tac Dough" were rigged, and before the show was taken over by NBC in 1957 Enright had made all the decisions on which contestants should be fed advance information. He said he got in touch with some 20 to 30 contestants before his grand jury appearance, told them he intended to deny giving them advance information, and urged most of them to deny any coaching. He said although he first lied to the grand jury he returned later and admitted the charges. Felsher said the day-time version of "Tic Tac Dough" had been rigged to some extent originally, but had not been "fixed" for the past year and a half because it was well established and could get along on its own.

Enright confirmed Felsher's testimony, said rigging of quiz shows had been a "practice for many, many years." He said "by my silence I might have condoned" Felsher's attempts to silence witnesses. He said the only way to keep quiz shows honest would be for networks to be in sole charge of preparing questions, with producers receiving them just before going on the air.

Enright said he didn't believe deception, in itself, was "necessarily bad" but should be measured in terms of "the hurt it inflicts on people." "A degree of deception is of considerable value in producing shows," he said. He termed "the one most reprehensible thing" for which he was responsible as co-owner of "Tic Tac Dough" the involvement of a 16-year-old girl in a rigging.

In Oct. 8-9 executive session testimony released Nov. 4, Martin Dowd, winner on "Tic Tac Dough," said the contest between himself and Capt. Michael O'Rourke was rigged. Felsher confirmed the statement. Edward Jurist, who produced "Dotto," said it was rigged and "The Quiz Kids," an earlier program, had been "controlled."

VAN DOREN TESTIMONY

Nov. 2 -- Van Doren, in a dramatic confession, said producer Albert Freedman had given him questions and answers in advance, coached him on how to behave on the "Twenty-One" program and guaranteed him specific winnings. He said his January 1959 testimony before the New York grand jury, denying he had been coached, was "not in accord with the facts."

The Rev. Charles E. (Stoney) Jackson and Wilton J. Springer (Springer through a statement sent to the Subcommittee) testified that they were given questions and answers before broadcasts of "The $64,000 Challenge" by assistant producer Shirley Bernstein.

Nov. 3 -- Band leader Xavier Cugat said Mert Koplin, producer of "The $64,000 Challenge," gave him answers in advance.

James Ross, manager of Patty Duke, 12, said in executive testimony released later that the child actress had been given answers by Shirley Bernstein for "The $64,000 Challenge."

Mert Koplin, former producer of "The $64,000 Question," said the sponsor, Revlon, in weekly meetings with the producers, expressed "definite opinions as to the value of our contestants" and would suggest certain ones continuing or leaving. Koplin said that "controls" -- asking questions the producers knew the contestants could or could not answer -- were used, but contestants never were told what questions they would be asked. Steven Carlin, executive producer of the two "$64,000" shows, supported Koplin's testimony.

Nov. 4 -- Charles and Martin Revson, executives of Revlon at the time of the shows, said that they did not know that the shows were rigged, denied Koplin's testimony and denied requesting that a contestant be forced off the program by particularly hard questions. During Martin Revson's testimony a sworn affidavit by George Abrams, former vice president of Revlon, was produced, saying that at weekly meetings it was discussed whether a contestant was attractive and "if he was dull, we would suggest to the producer that it would be desirable that the contestant not continue in the future." Abrams said that the sponsors understood the program's "controls." Revson denied Abrams' statements.

James D. Webb, president of the C.J. Laroche Advertising Agency, which handled Revlon's quiz show accounts, said that he had attended many of the weekly meetings and never heard anything to arouse his suspicions. A sworn statement by Shirley Bernstein was read into the record. She said that her coaching of contestants was on the instruction of Steven Carlin, who gave her the instructions because the sponsor (Revlon) "wanted it that way."

Kenneth Hoffer, former buyer for the Hess Brothers department store in Allentown, Pa., told of appearing on "The $64,000 Question" and owner Max Hess testified that he had paid $10,000 to get Hoffer on the show for publicity purposes.

Nov. 5 -- George Abrams said he believed that the sponsors (Revlon) knew about the "controls" on "The $64,000 Question" and "The $64,000 Challenge." Abrams said the Columbia Broadcasting System, which carried the programs, had been told about quiz fixes but did nothing about it. (Louis G. Cowan, who originated "The $64,000 Question," Dec. 8 resigned as president of the CBS television network and said CBS President Frank Stanton had forced his action.)

Max Levine, Hess publicity man, said Bob Considine, a columnist, was paid $1,000 for coming to the store and then writing a story about the visit. He also said payments were made to various persons for plugs on TV shows. (Considine, answering Levine's testimony, Nov. 5 said he had made a "personal appearance" at the store and "it had nothing to do with plugs.")

NBC, CBS VIEWS

Robert E. Kintner, president of the National Broadcasting Co., said the network had uncovered a "kickback" system on the show "Treasure Hunt" -- contestants had turned back part of their winnings to employees who helped them get on the program. Kintner suggested legislation to make it a Federal crime to participate knowingly in rigged contest programs.

He said NBC was setting up a special unit to police its quiz shows and that it wasn't aware of rigging earlier because "we put too much trust in independent producers." Oren Harris said, "If the television industry doesn't police itself, it faces the danger of rigid controls by the Government."

Nov. 6 -- Dr. Frank Stanton, president of CBS, which cancelled all quiz shows after the testimony on rigging, said, "We believe that legislation is no cure-all for these ills...the primary responsibility lies with the broadcasting industry." He said he was unaware of quiz show fixes before August 1958 and then acted promptly to cancel the offending programs.

Subcommittee member Walter Rogers (D Texas) alluded to and later showed reporters letters he said were exchanged by the FCC and Waldron Leonard. According to Rogers, Leonard wrote the FCC in October 1952 that he was coached on "The Big Payoff" and received prizes inferior to those advertised, and the FCC replied "your views are appreciated" but said its jurisdiction over program content was limited.

A letter from Burton Lane, president of the American Guild of Authors and Composers, charging that "commercial bribery" had become a "prime factor" in deciding what music was played on many stations was read into the record as the quiz hearings ended. (Murray Kaufman, president of the National Council of Disc Jockeys, later wired the Subcommittee demanding an apology.)

Remedies Proposed

As the testimony on rigging of TV shows continued, attention turned to possible legislative remedies and the responsibility to the public of the Federal agencies regulating the field. In general, broadcasters said the industry should clean its own nest.

Officials of the FCC, which licenses television and broadcasting stations, and the Federal Trade Commission, which is concerned with fraudulent advertising, were in doubt that they had authority to cope with the practices brought out in the Subcommittee hearings.

FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer Oct. 10 said neither he nor the New York prosecutor who conducted the grand jury investigation "have been able to pinpoint any violation of the law" in quiz show rigging, and that "we can't determine who has been harmed...the home owner certainly didn't pay his way into the show." He said there were "many things that are fraudulent, deceitful and reprehensible that the law cannot reach" because of free speech guarantees and censorship bans, but that the FCC was studying the whole matter of network-advertising-sponsor relations in hopes of coming up "with an over-all rule." Doerfer said the FCC first heard reports of rigging in July 1958 and directed inquiries to the two major networks but received assurances none of their officials was involved.

Addressing the Radio Television News Directors Assn. in New Orleans, Doerfer Oct. 14 said the cure for all "objectionable programming" should be "greater incentive for the exercise of self-regulatory restraints...."

Rep. Harris Oct. 21 released a letter from FCC member Robert E. Lee saying the FCC did have authority under existing law to crack down on TV frauds.

Chairman Earl W. Kintner of the Federal Trade Commission Oct. 12 said his agency never had exercised jurisdiction over "deceptive entertainment" and "in my opinion there is a serious question whether such jurisdiction exists." He suggested that if Congress enacted legislation making it a criminal offense to rig a TV show, "it would have a salutary effect."

Speaking at a regional meeting of the National Assn. of Broadcasters in Washington, D.C., Oct. 15, Kintner warned: "If self-regulation becomes ineffective, the Government should provide whatever policing is required by the public interest." He said the rigging of quiz shows posed a serious threat to the industry's reputation. Kintner urged the broadcasting industry "to police its advertising and programming so well that more laws, regulations and policing will not be necessary."

NAB president Harold E. Fellows Oct. 16 said, "This industry has proved, in its four decades of service, it can clean its own house when necessary." He said the television Code of Good Practice under which NAB member stations regulate their own programming and advertising, would be amended if necessary "to further protect the viewing public against misrepresentation or deceit."

Donald H. McGannon of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., head of the NAB television code supervisory board, said, "The threat of Government regulation," as voiced by Chairman Kintner, "is no idle threat."

Kintner Nov. 1 ordered intensified policing of TV commercials. He said that the FTC would monitor networks full-time; that the major networks would have to submit for review all advertisements from Nov. 15 to Dec. 14; and that field offices had been directed to study local programs.

The Federal Communications Commission Dec. 7 began at least a month of hearings on broadcasting practices.

Rep. John E. Moss (D Calif.), a member of the Harris Subcommittee, Nov. 7 said Congress should consider legislation to divorce sponsors of any control over TV programs and to subject networks to the same control that the FCC exercises over individual stations.

RADIATION HAZARDS

World-wide fear of devastation from a nuclear war and of the mounting hazards of nuclear bomb testing led in 1959 to a continuation of the suspension of bomb tests and to efforts by President Eisenhower and Soviet Premier Khrushchev to reach a disarmament agreement. It also prompted Congress and other governmental groups to try to learn more about radiation and how to control it.

Radiation in its various forms is a cause of cancer, particularly of the bones, blood and lungs. Cells of the reproductive system, lymph glands and bone marrow are particularly sensitive to radiation. It is a cause of diseases to the eye, ear, and the digestive tract. It can render the body more susceptible to infection and disease by lowering the blood count, shorten the lifespan and cause sterility. By attacking the reproductive cells controlling heredity, it causes an increase in still births, deformities and abnormalities in future generations. Of particular concern is the belief that radiation can cause an increase in mental defects and lower physical vigor in unborn generations. From the standpoint of heredity, all radiation is harmful. Children and pregnant women are particularly sensitive to radiation.

Man has been living with radiation since the beginning of time, for there is natural radiation in the earth's atmosphere. It comes from cosmic rays and from such radioactive elements as uranium and radium. The first man-made radiation came with the discovery of X-rays in 1895. Even with the inception of atomic power, X-rays today are still the major source of man-made radiation. It has been estimated that by the age of 30 a man has been exposed to about four rems from natural radiation and about 5 rems from X-rays and other forms of medical radiation. All other types of radiation, including the world-wide fallout from atomic weapons testing, accounts for less than one rem. In 1959 it was believed that radiation exposure should not be more than 10 rems as the average per capita dose at the age of 30.

The amount of radiation from man-made causes will increase in future years with the expansion of the atomic energy industry, the use of atomic-propelled ships, submarines, and airplanes, and the increased use of radioactive isotopes by farmers, industry and doctors. Increasing numbers of people will be employed in industries in which they will be exposed to radiation. Therefore, the Federal Government is stepping up its research in detecting and measuring radiation and efforts are being carried on, notably by the U.S. Public Health Service, to cut back on the unnecessary use of X-rays. Many states now ban the use of fluoroscopes to fit shoes.

Extent of Risk

There is a wide divergence of opinion as to the extent of the risk from radiation. The maximum dosage rates for workers in the atomic energy program and other workers consistently exposed to radiation has been sharply scaled down in recent years. The National Advisory Committee on Radiation reported to the U.S. Surgeon General in March that, because of lack of much basic scientific data, it was currently very difficult, if not impossible, to establish "many radiation protection standards on a wholly satisfactory basis." There had been no clear federal policy as to the role of the various federal departments and agencies in defining, controlling and enforcing radiation safety programs. The role of the states also was unclear.

In an attempt to meet this problem, the President issued an executive order on Aug. 14 establishing a Federal Radiation Council. Members are the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, who was appointed chairman of the Council, and the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce. The President gave the Department of Health, Education and Welfare the primary responsibility to collect, analyze and interpret data on radiation relating to public health and safety.

Congress Sept. 11 passed a bill (S 2568) establishing the Council as a statutory body, increasing its membership to include the Secretary of Labor and directing the Council to consult qualified scientists and experts on radiation matters. It also permitted the states to assume increased responsibility and control over radiation hazards, and authorized the Atomic Energy Commission to assist the states, particularly by training state personnel, to assume their new responsibilities.

War and Fallout

The scope of a nuclear attack has been considered by many groups. In 1959 a comprehensive study of the problem was done by the Special Subcommittee on Radiation of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee. The hearings held June 22-26 were under the chairmanship of Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.). The Subcommittee assumed for study purposes that 4,000 megaton bombs were dropped on the world in one day. It assumed that the United States was attacked in mid-October, after the harvest of the most important farm crops, by an enemy dropping 263 nuclear bombs, with a total yield of 1,446 megatons, on 224 U.S. cities and military bases located in every state of the Union. It also assumed that an additional 2,500 megatons were dropped elsewhere in the Northern Hemisphere on U.S. overseas bases and by the United States in retaliation against the homeland of the aggressor nation. It assumed the energy yield of the bombs was 50 percent fusion and 50 percent fission. Fission is the primary source of radioactive fallout. Fallout occurs when a nuclear bomb is exploded and throws high into the air a huge cloud of radioactive particles which gradually descend back to earth in different sizes and at different rates.

On the basis of such a hypothetical attack, the expert testimony presented at the Joint Committee hearings indicated that such an attack would cost the lives of about 25 percent of the U.S. population; that nearly 50 million Americans would be killed, including nearly 23 million the first day. The experts also believed that 20 million more would sustain serious though non-fatal injuries. They thought that the blast and the intense concentration of heat and radiation from the bombs' fire balls would account for 75 percent of the deaths. They estimated that fallout would account for 25 percent of the deaths and more than half of the injuries.

On the basis of the Subcommittee's assumed attack, the experts also estimated that:

1. Nearly 50 percent or approximately 35 million dwellings in the United States would be destroyed or unusable for a period of several months because of radiation.

2. Millions of animals used as a source of food would be killed, mainly by fallout. Destruction to growing crops and damage to food would be widespread.

3. Maximum fallout would occur not at the point of the bomb strike but at points up to 60-70 miles away.

4. Fallout would occur over the rest of the world, but it would not pose a major survival problem. However, the level of strontium 90 would rise to more than the maximum permissible concentration recommended for

Atomic Terms

Atom -- The smallest particle of a chemical element.

Fission -- Splitting the inner core of uranium or plutonium atoms into two parts to generate energy. Fission releases intense heat and harmful radiation.

Fusion -- The joining of the cores of atoms to form a heavier atomic nucleus. Fusion is accomplished under conditions of extreme heat and by the release of a vast amount of energy. The energy of the sun comes from the fusion of hydrogen atoms to form helium.

Isotope -- Related atomic nuclei of the same element. They have the same energy charge and identical chemical behavior but have small differences in atomic weight. Uranium 235 and uranium 238 are isotopes of the same element.

Megaton -- One million tons. A one megaton nuclear bomb has the explosive energy equivalent of one million tons of TNT.

Radiation -- The release of atomic energy which damages many substances, including cells, tissues and body fluids of all living creatures. Severe radiation causes death. Unstable atoms which have a spontaneous nuclear charge, then disintegrate or decay, are said to be radioactive.

Rem -- A unit measuring a dose of exposure to all types of radiation in relation to its biological effect on man.

Curie -- A measure of the rate that a radioactive material throws off particles.

the population as a whole as a peacetime standard.

The Committee concluded, from the evidence presented at the hearings, that to withstand and recover from such a nuclear attack, the U.S. must have an effective national civil defense program. Experts estimated that such a program could reduce fatalities from 25 percent to about 3 percent of the U.S. population.

Similar conclusions on the importance of civilian defense to reduce deaths and injuries in a nuclear war were emphasized by the Office of Civil Defense Mobilization, the Rockefeller Survival Report presented by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) to his state on July 7, and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.). Humphrey Aug. 24 announced that a comprehensive civil defense manual had been printed at his request by the Senate Government Operations Committee. It was estimated that a national civil defense program would cost from $5 billion to $20 billion. The Radiation Subcommittee Aug. 31 published a summary of its hearings, "Biological and Environmental Effects of Nuclear War."

Fallout Controversy

Of all the nuclear hazards, nuclear fallout is the most controversial. Distinguished scientists, and many other experts, differ greatly as to the nature of fallout, its extent and effect on living organisms. Chairman Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee complained June 13 that his Committee's effort "to obtain full information on the fallout problem has been plagued by confusion among scientists" who had offered the Committee both "technical advice and political judgment."

For example, the AEC General Advisory Committee on May 4 said the fallout hazard from all bomb explosions and nuclear weapons testing to date was less than 5 percent as much as the average exposure to cosmic rays and other natural radiation and less than 5 percent of the estimated average radiation exposure of the American public to X-rays for medical purposes. Dr. Charles L. Dunham, director of the AEC Division of Biology and Medicine, told the Joint Committee May 5 that the fallout from nuclear weapons to date might account for an additional 500 deaths and diseases to present and future generations as an annual average, including from 3,500 to 7,000 additional bone cancer cases in the next 70 years. But he told the Society of Nuclear Medicine on June 19 that he believed these estimates were high. Dr. Linus Pauling, a Nobel prize-winning scientist of California Institute of Technology, March 30 predicted fallout to date would cause cancer or other serious disease in 50,000 Americans and 23,000 mental defects in future generations.

Hearings on Fallout

The Joint Committee's Radiation Subcommittee under Chairman Holifield has held hearings on fallout twice during the past two and a half years, in May and June of 1957, and also May 5-8, 1959. The hearings developed significant differences, mainly because more was known about fallout in 1959 than two years earlier. One of the most interesting changes in scientific thinking concerns the rate of fallout. In 1957 the general concensus was that it took radioactive material from five to ten years to fall out of the atmosphere to earth. In 1959 the general consensus was that the radioactive debris was returning to earth in from one to five years. The faster fallout would make the shorter-lived isotopes, or radioactive elements, a greater potential health hazard than previously believed.

The AEC submitted estimates that nuclear detonations from 1945-58 had produced 90 to 92 megatons of fission.

The Committee said the "predicted average concentration" of strontium 90 in the human bone would be "about 48 strontium units" if nuclear testing followed the same pattern in the next 40 years as it had for the past five years. "This is close enough to the maximum permissible body burden of 67 strontium units recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection to suggest that a hazard to the world's population could result" from fallout if nuclear bomb tests were continued for the next two generations, the Committee said.

Other major points brought out by the hearings were that:

1. Strontium 90 and cesium 137, both long-lived radioactive elements, are still considered the greatest hazards in world-wide fallout, but carbon 14, an even longer-lived radioactive element, appears to be a greater long-range hazard than was previously believed. Strontium 90 is a cause of leukemia, bone tumors and cancers; cesium 137 concentrates in the muscles and flesh and destroys reproductive cells; and carbon 14 can cause abnormalities and stillbirths in future generations.

PATTERNS OF FALLOUT

2. Fallout is not uniform. About two-thirds of the fallout to date has occurred in the Northern Hemisphere, one-third in the Southern Hemisphere. Fallout also tends to be heavier in the 40-50 degree latitudes in both hemispheres than at the Equator. The United States generally has received more fallout than any other nation because of the Nevada Testing Site and the prevailing west-to-east winds. Fallout rates are affected by seasonable fluctuations, air currents and weather. For example, strontium 90 falls out faster in the spring and summer than in the fall and winter.

3. Large doses of radioactive fallout appear to have more adverse effects on living creatures and their descendants than small doses of the same amount absorbed over a long period of time.

4. Certain plants and crops, notably wheat, rice, various grasses and vegetables, appear to pick up more fallout from rain falling directly on their leaves than through the soil. They also pick up fallout from the soil. Cows, on the other hand, absorb most of the fallout from the food and water which they eat and drink, so only a small quantity of radioactivity is passed on in dairy products. Thus, assuming an equal amount of fallout on the Eastern and Western hemispheres, Eastern people subsisting largely on a cereal diet would receive twice as much strontium 90 through their food as Western people whose diet contains a larger proportion of dairy products.

5. The average concentration of strontium 90 in human bone from past nuclear tests will increase, as it did during 1957 and 1958, until 1965, even if no more nuclear tests are conducted. However, this concentration is not considered harmful. Nor are the temporary higher-than-average concentrations of fallout considered hazardous to the populations of "hot spots" hit by rains from clouds with a high concentration of radio-active material. A summary of the fallout hearings was published Aug. 24.

CQ Fact Sheet On Committee Secrecy

CONGRESS CLOSED 30% OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS

The first session of the 86th Congress was notable for a sharp reduction in committee secrecy in comparison with the sessions from 1953-58.

A Congressional Quarterly survey revealed that Congress in 1959 excluded the press and the public from fewer than 30 percent of its committee meetings -- the lowest figure since 1953. Of 1,639 meetings held by House committees between Jan. 7 and Sept. 15, when the session ended, 434 (or 26 percent) were held in executive (closed) session. Of 1,350 Senate committee gatherings during the same period, 433 (or 32 percent) were held behind closed doors. In all, Congress closed 29.6 percent of its 3,152 committee meetings during the 1959 session.

The total number of meetings during 1959 was itself a notable figure. It was the second highest total recorded for a first session (and the third highest for any session) since Congressional Quarterly began its tally of open-closed meetings in 1953. Because of the reorganization of committees at the start of every new Congress, most committees do not meet as often during the first session as they do in the second.

Following is a year-by-year breakdown of open and closed committee meetings since 1953:

Year	Total Meetings	Number Closed	Percent Closed
1953	2,640	892	35
1954	3,002	1,243	41
1955	2,940	1,055	36
1956	3,120	1,130	36
1957	3,251	1,103	34
1958	3,472	1,167	34
1959	3,152	940	30

Commenting on the decline in closed hearings since the high of 41 percent in 1954, Sevellon Brown, Chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and editor of the Providence (R.I.) Journal and Bulletin, said: "The downward trend in closed Congressional committee meetings as recorded by Congressional Quarterly should be gratifying to every newspaper and newspaperman in the country. It should be remembered, however, that the fight against Government secrecy has not ended. It will be the job of a free American press to see that the trend continues."

Congressional Quarterly's tabulations are based on information appearing in the Daily Digest section of the Congressional Record. According to Section 221 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946: "The Joint Committee on Printing is authorized and directed to provide for printing in the Daily Record (the Daily Digest of the Congressional Record)...a list of Congressional committee hearings and meetings, and the place of meeting and subject matter; and to cause a brief resume of Congressional activities for the previous day to be incorporated in the Record."

Each committee decides when it will bar the public from its sessions. While most of the committees report all their meetings for publication in the Record, a few fail to report their executive sessions.

A spokesman for the House Select Small Business Committee told CQ that several executive sessions were held by the Committee but not reported because Section 221 was interpreted as applying only to public hearings.

The House Un-American Activities Committee said it had reported none of its closed hearings because of the possibility that witnesses appearing in secret session might receive unfavorable publicity. The Committee did not estimate the number of such hearings in 1959.

The busiest of all Congressional committees -- House Appropriations -- did not report any of its executive sessions during 1959. The 15 subcommittees which make up the full Committee traditionally go over money requests in private because Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) believes the Committee gets more work done this way and makes better use of its limited office space.

Individual Committees

Of the Congressional committees logging more than 50 meetings during the 1959 session, six held more than half in executive session. Four of the six committees -- House Foreign Affairs, Senate Foreign Relations, Senate Armed Services and Joint Atomic Energy -- gave national security precautions as a reason for the high degree of secrecy. The six committees were:

House Foreign Affairs, which closed 86 of its 118 meetings (73 percent); Senate Foreign Relations, which closed 74 of its 124 meetings (60 percent); Senate Armed Services, which closed 44 of its 77 meetings (57 percent); Joint Atomic Energy, which closed 59 of its 110 meetings (54 percent); House Ways and Means, which closed 54 of its 101 sessions (53 percent); and Senate Finance, which closed 27 of its 52 meetings (52 percent).

Ground Rules

The tabulations in the chart on the next page excluded: meetings when Congress was not in regular session; meetings outside Washington, D.C.; meetings of conference committees to reconcile conflicting Senate and House versions of bills; informal meetings without official status; meetings of the House Rules Committee to consider sending legislation to the floor, but Rules Committee meetings for other purposes were included; meetings of House Appropriations Committee.

Open meetings followed by closed meeting were counted twice -- once in each category. Joint meetings of two separate committees were counted twice -- once for each committee. Morning and afternoon sessions of the same committee were counted only once if the committee covered the same subject in both sessions. The figures are based on information appearing in the Daily Digests of the Congressional Record and that obtained from the committees.

1959 ELECTIONS SHOWED NO MAJOR TRENDS

Neither party could discern a dramatic trend in the 1959 off-year elections, in which the major inter-party battles were for mayors' posts. Republicans and Democrats split the top offices in Hawaii's first election as a state. Democrats elected new Governors in Kentucky and Mississippi and voted Earl K. Long (D La.) out of office.

● HAWAII -- An unprecedented 93 percent of the 183,000 registered voters turned out for Hawaii's July 28 election. Republicans won the top prize when William F. Quinn (R), appointed Governor in 1957 by President Eisenhower, defeated Delegate John A. Burns (D) for Governor. The victory gave the GOP power to appoint more than 500 officials of the new state.

Democrats took two of the three Congressional races. The vote totals:

GOVERNOR	William F. Quinn (R)	86,215
	John A. Burns (D)	82,054
SENATE TERM A	Hiram L. Fong (R)	87,175
	Frank F. Fasi (D)	77,692
SENATE TERM B	Oren E. Long (D)	83,704
	Wilfred C. Tsukiyama (R)	79,123
REPRESENTATIVE	Daniel K. Inouye (D)	111,733
	Charles H. Silva (R)	51,058

Republicans gained control of the state senate, 14-11; Democrats retained control of the house, 33-18.

Background of the three Hawaii Members of Congress:

FONG -- Hiram L. Fong, 51, a self-made millionaire, was the first person of Chinese ancestry elected to the Senate. Born in Honolulu, he worked his way through the University of Hawaii and Harvard law school. He returned to Hawaii and founded the complex of law, loan, realty, investment and insurance firms on which his fortune rests. A World War II Air Force major, he served 14 years in the territorial house.

LONG -- Kansas-born Oren E. Long, 70, first went to Hawaii in 1917 as a social worker. A graduate of Columbia teacher's college, he was, successively, a school teacher, superintendent of public instruction, director of public welfare and secretary of Hawaii. President Harry S. Truman appointed him Governor in 1951. He served in the territorial senate from 1956-59.

INOUYE -- Daniel K. Inouye, 34, is a Nisei -- a native American of Japanese parenthood -- the first of his group to serve in the House. Born in Hawaii, he graduated from the University of Hawaii and George Washington University law school. He enlisted in the Army in World War II and lost his right arm in combat. He served in the territorial legislature from 1955-59 and got the most votes in the state election.

● KENTUCKY GOVERNORSHIP -- Bert T. Combs (D) Nov. 3 defeated ex-Rep. John M. Robsion Jr. (R, 1953-59) by a record plurality of more than 138,000 votes to become Governor of Kentucky. Combs' victory was a setback not only to the GOP, which had won two Senate seats in Kentucky in 1956, but also to the political ambitions of retiring Gov. A.B. (Happy) Chandler (D), a declared candidate for the 1960 Presidential nomination.

Chandler had defeated Combs for the gubernatorial nomination in 1955, but in the May 26, 1959 primary Combs defeated the Chandler-backed candidate, Lt. Gov. Harry Lee Waterfield (D), by a margin of about 28,000 votes. Chandler campaigned actively against Combs in the general election, but to no avail.

Combs' campaign was managed by ex-Sen. Earle C. Clements (D), a long-time Chandler foe and a supporter of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) for President. Combs Dec. 9 named Clements highway commissioner.

Elected lieutenant governor on Combs' ticket was Wilson W. Wyatt (D), formerly mayor of Louisville and later a leader in Adlai E. Stevenson's campaigns.

● MISSISSIPPI GOVERNORSHIP -- After two previous unsuccessful efforts, attorney Ross D. Barnett (D), 61, Nov. 3 won unopposed election as Governor of Mississippi. Barnett's real challenge had been in the Aug. 25 runoff primary, in which he defeated Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin (D) by 33,000 votes.

Gartin had the endorsement of the two men who had turned back Barnett's previous bids -- Govs. Hugh L. White (D, 1952-56) and J.P. Coleman (D, 1956-60). He had been lieutenant governor in both the White and Coleman administrations and defended them against Barnett's criticisms. Both Barnett and Gartin were avowed segregationists.

● LOUISIANA GOVERNORSHIP -- A series of serio-comic episodes involving Louisiana Gov. Earl K. Long (D) set the stage for the Dec. 5 Democratic primary in which he received a sharp political setback.

Long was flown under guard to a Galveston, Texas, hospital May 30 after he had shocked the state legislature with outbursts of profanity and a bitter harangue against his political enemies.

In the following weeks, Long was in and out of three hospitals in a continuing battle with his doctors, his wife and other members of his family. He was finally freed from a state mental hospital June 26 after he fired the state director of hospitals and the chief of the institution where he was a patient.

Barred by the state constitution from seeking re-election, Long filed as a candidate for lieutenant governor on a ticket headed by ex-Gov. James A. Noe. But in the Dec. 5 primary neither Noe nor Long ran well enough to win places in the runoff primary.

In the Jan. 9, 1960 runoff, Louisiana Democrats will choose either New Orleans Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison, the front-runner Dec. 5, or ex-Gov. Jimmie H. Davis (1944-48) as the nominee for Governor.

● MAYORALTIES -- Richard J. Daley (D) April 7 won a second term as mayor of Chicago.

J. Harold Grady (D) May 4 was elected mayor of Baltimore, defeating ex-Mayor and ex-Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin (R). Grady, a state's attorney, defeated Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro Jr. (D) in the March 3 primary.

In Nov. 3 voting around the country:

John F. Collins (D), Suffolk County register of probate, upset State Sen. John E. Powers (D) to win election as mayor of Boston.

Richardson Dilworth (D) won a second term as mayor of Philadelphia, beating Harold E. Stassen (R).

J. Bracken Lee, former GOP Governor of Utah, turned Independent, became mayor of Salt Lake City.

George Christopher (R) won a second term in San Francisco, Anthony J. Celebrezze (D) a fourth term in Cleveland, and Richard C. Lee (D) a fourth term in New Haven. Democrats won all ten of the largest cities in Indiana.

REPUBLICANS OUTLINE THEIR LONG-TERM GOALS

The Republican Committee on Program and Progress, formed Feb. 25, 1959 to "examine and clarify long-range political objectives of the Republican party," Oct. 3-8 released the first three sections of its report, titled "Decisions for a Better America." The final two sections were released Oct. 10 and 13.

Chicago businessman Charles H. Percy headed the 40-man committee, drawn from public life and a wide cross-section of occupations, that prepared the report.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon Oct. 5 said the committee had "done an outstanding job of matching our actions with an imaginative factual statement.... This report brings home the fact that we are conservative because we want progress."

Highlights of the first three sections follow:

Preface

The challenge of the future, the report said, is "to deal wisely with the great world and national problems that face us, while preserving the principles that give our life meaning and worth (and) yet...welcoming change as the key to all progress.

"The Republican program for a stronger America... is the application to the specific problems and challenges of the future of the great human principle: faith in the individual.... This principle underlies our determination to guard against the heedless growth of the central Government in Washington....

"It prompts the Republican policy of due care in public spending to avoid eating away the right of the people to save or to invest their own money in their own way....

"(It) prompts the Republican party to resist government's intrusion into the affairs of men in every walk of life. For governmental paternalism carries a price tag -- the surrender of the individual's right to order his own life, to plan his own future.

"Republicans believe in a central Government vigilantly alert to the needs of the people and strong enough to defend the people, to help keep the economy in balance, and to make certain that a life of dignity is within the reach of every American.

"But the strength that this Government wields must come from a community of informed, responsible, free people, aware of their own strength and given a clear path by Government to apply that strength."

Science and Technology

"All Americans favor the constant strengthening of our science and technology," the report said. "There is a broad difference, however, between the alternative means available to strengthen this effort.... One way tends persistently toward Federal control and direction of science and technology. Another way, the one we support, makes clear that...the vigorous, competitive efforts of private agencies, foundations and industries provide our greatest assurance of technological progress. The Federal Government has a logical and vital role in promoting and supporting this progress -- but it must be held scrupulously to this supporting role without excessive centralization of control."

The report specifically rejected proposals for a Cabinet-level Department of Science, on the grounds that coordination of research effort "through administrative fiat...will diminish creative scientific activity."

It "strongly endorsed the Federal Government's role in support of basic research" and said "some additional money could usefully be spent" in this field. But it added, "as a matter of principle, the Federal Government's role in applied research, and especially engineering, should be held to present levels or perhaps gradually diminished."

The report called for continued Federal "research and development related to space exploration."

On other specific matters, the report took these stands:

Private Research -- It favored patent policies and tax incentives "to encourage individuals and private organizations to be more creative." It said "the American people should undertake to distribute the fruits of scientific advance, not through Government-owned facilities, but through private competitive enterprise."

Atomic Power -- "We believe that the Federal Government...must develop promising new reactor concepts that might have useful military as well as peaceful applications. But there is no need for the Government to produce and sell energy from its own atomic power plants. Private owners, paying a fair price to the Government for the development of the plants, can consistently provide better service to the consumer."

Automation -- The report recommended use of unemployment compensation and retraining of workers to meet the "transitional problem" of "technological job displacement" resulting from automation.

National Security and Peace

The report defined the "ultimate objective of American foreign policy" as "a free world," and stated these basic goals in various parts of the world:

For the North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries, "the task for the future...is to work together for economic and cultural ends as energetically as we do for military purposes."

For the "less developed nations," the goal is to "help these states to achieve the economic and political stability and the cultural development that undergird freedom."

As for the former colonies, "We must assure these people that we affirm their right of self-determination in choosing the type of government under which they wish to live, and that once they have made their decision in free elections we will respect and work with the government of their choosing."

Satellites -- "Our policy in relation to Communist satellites," the report said, "is emancipation -- achieved not by the use of force from without, but primarily by the appeal of freedom to the minds of men everywhere. For the achievement of emancipation, our weapons are not military, but ideological, psychological, political, economic and diplomatic.... Our people must be alert to any cracks in the empire the Communists are trying to build.

We must encourage and exploit any weakening of the bonds that tie the satellites to Moscow. Eventually the spirit of freedom may overpower the force of tyranny even in the Soviet Union and China. A transition -- perhaps over a longer period of time -- may take place which will eliminate the most dangerous features of the Communist regime -- its ruthless total domination of nations and of the individual."

Mutual Security -- The report endorsed the system of worldwide alliances and the policy of supplying military aid to friendly free nations. On the economic side, it supported "economic mutual assistance and development programs that meet the test of contributing to worldwide freedom; that are subject to meticulous country-by-country periodic reappraisal; and that are progressively shifted to more economical bases of extended private investments and loans with political and financial guarantees."

Trade -- The report called for "a continuation of the policy of gradual, selective and reciprocal reduction of the barriers to a freer exchange of goods and services among free nations. Application of this policy should continue to be made with care to avoid serious adverse effects on business and labor within our domestic economy and to preserve at home certain types of enterprises and skills for reasons of national security. To this end, we support the judicious use of the escape clause and peril-point provisions in existing legislation."

It endorsed trade with Communist states so long as it "does not increase their relative military strength."

Cultural Exchange -- The committee called for expanded cultural and scientific exchange among all countries and specifically recommended "that the present law requiring fingerprinting of visa applicants be amended to eliminate the fingerprint requirement except when, in time of emergency, the President determines it necessary."

Immigration -- The report said "time and conditions have made obsolete the national origins laws of 35 years ago" and called for a "careful study of these changes" as "the first step toward a more realistic modernization of our immigration laws."

Communist China -- The report said, "We oppose the diplomatic recognition of the Chinese Communist regime or its admission to the United Nations, because at present we see in those actions no advantage to the cause of freedom and much disadvantage."

Diplomats -- The report urged Congress to "appropriate sufficient funds for the salaries and expenses of our ambassadors so that the selection of personnel for these posts can be made entirely on the basis of individual ability." It also urged that each ambassador be "reasonably conversant" with the language of the country to which he is assigned, "thoroughly informed" on its history and traditions and "psychologically suited to live among the people of that country."

United Nations -- The report favored "the elimination of the veto power in cases involving the admission of new members;" an expansion of the UN's role "in the work of aiding the less developed countries;" and creation of an emergency UN military force.

Rule of Law -- The report favored "wider use of the International Court of Justice by member nations in cases where differences are susceptible of settlement by the court.... The United States should, along with other states, extend the jurisdiction of the court by incorporating into future treaties, in specific cases where the Senate approves, a provision requiring submission to the court of disputes involving interpretation of their terms, and accepting the obligation of abiding by the court's decision."

Defense -- The report said the free world must "maintain a great military force as far into the future as we can foresee" and said the U.S. economy is strong enough to "provide whatever is necessary to insure our security as a nation." It called for "a balanced and rounded defense. We must be ready with a variety of weapons and forces. No single weapon and no single service, by itself, can effectively deter aggression. The temptation to put too many eggs in one basket must be strongly resisted."

Civil Defense -- Emphasizing the importance of a civil defense program, the report said "the Federal Government can give impetus to the development of an adequate national shelter program by requiring that shelter accommodations be provided in any construction dependent on Government financing." It also suggested that individual communities "may decide that bomb shelters (must) be provided in all dwelling units."

Internal Security -- The report said that "the resources of all levels of government should be enlisted in the effort to assure internal security. The prevention of subversion traditionally has been the task of state as well as the Federal Government. Although the National Government must have the dominant role in the detection and prevention of Communist subversion, it must not preempt the field."

As for Government employment, the report said that "no foe of freedom should be employed or retained in any agency of Government. However, any program to exclude Communists and their allies from public employment must, in order to avoid injustice, be within clearly defined areas and have adequate procedural safeguards."

Disarmament -- The report said disarmament traditionally has been a Republican policy and that "all significant disarmament efforts have taken place during the administration of Republican Presidents."

It said, "The United States must strive constantly for agreements with the Soviet Union and other countries of the world for effective disarmament and control of weapons of mass destruction. We would also welcome agreement with the Soviet Union and other countries of the world on a permanent cessation of nuclear testing of war weapons. Such agreements must include a program of inspection sufficient to guarantee that these steps toward peace are not unilateral... Failure to achieve agreement leaves us no alternative but to continue nuclear testing, for the risks we may incur from such tests are far less dangerous, and affect far fewer people, than the risk of permitting Communist military superiority."

The report also endorsed "a far-sighted agreement for the demilitarization of outer space" and said "agreements should be reached for a reduction in successive stages of conventional armed forces."

REPORTS ON HUMAN NEEDS, ECONOMIC PROGRESS ISSUED

The Republican Committee on Program and Progress Oct. 10 and 13 released the final two sections of its report on "Decisions for a Better America."

Highlights of the final two sections:

Human Rights and Needs

"By 1976," the report said, "we will be a Nation of 240 million people -- 60 million more than today -- with a labor force close to 95 million and a gross national product approaching $900 billion. Ninety-five million Americans will be under 20 in 1976. Twenty-two million will be over 65. Over one-third of the population will be living in the new suburbs that are springing up in every metropolitan area of the nation. The social and economic changes inherent in this growth are the concern of every American citizen and every branch of Government.

"We believe that the American people should accept no less than opportunity for productive jobs at good wages for every man and woman of working age; individual security, undiluted by inflation and excessive taxation; the most modern medical, hospital and health facilities; a world at peace with the atom serving humanity."

The report stated these basic beliefs:

"That Government has a positive responsibility to its people to maintain the conditions for a sound, productive economy....

"That every American must have access to the best education his individual endowments enable him to use....

"That every American should enjoy every reasonable protection against those conditions or accidents that threaten him with economic disaster through no fault of his own.

"That every American of whatever race or creed must have the chance to make his best contribution to society, to himself and his family, and to earn a status of respect."

The report emphasized that individual initiative was of primary importance in achieving these goals. "We returned constantly," it said, "to the plain and vital fact that self-reliance is the human resource we must look to for our margin of strength in the world ahead."

As for Government action, it said, "Human rights and needs are best served by agencies situated as close as possible to the individual.... The Federal Government has a role to play only when individuals, communities or states cannot by themselves do the things that must be done.... The Federal Government should so shape its programs as to stimulate and supplement, but not supplant, state, local and private action."

Education -- The report opposed "any proposal that would result in shifting to the Federal Government the responsibility for maintenance and operation of schools, including support of teachers' salaries." But it endorsed a program of "matching Federal grants for elementary and secondary classroom construction where need is demonstrated and local resources are clearly inadequate." The grants, it said, should be paid in installments over a period of years "to minimize the immediate impact on the Federal budget."

The report also said assistance to colleges for construction of dormitory and classroom buildings "is justified in some instances." It recommended making community colleges eligible for matching grants for mathematics, science and language teaching equipment.

Civil Rights -- The report said "unconstitutional barriers" to voting "must be speedily removed;" "vigorous programs" should be developed to assure equality of opportunity in employment, education, health services and housing; and "high priority" should be given to "the peaceful and orderly transition" to "the day when segregation is completely eliminated in public places."

It said the Government should:

"Adhere firmly to the principle that the rule of law is supreme.

"Take effective action to deal with persons who use force or threats of force to obstruct court orders in school desegregation cases.

"Make full use of its investigative powers" in school and church bombing cases.

Give statutory authority to the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

"Establish effective, equal opportunity in all Government-supported and Government-subsidized housing and enforce non-discrimination rulings in all other governmental activities."

Housing -- The report said "millions of new dwelling units must be built," but did not make specific recommendations on existing Federal programs in this field.

Health -- Citing the need for increased medical facilities and personnel, the report said the Federal Government should carry out these "partnership" programs:

"Assistance in the construction of buildings needed to accommodate the increased enrollment in schools of medicine, dentistry and public health if...(other) resources prove inadequate...."

Grants for a "renovation and repair of outmoded urban hospitals."

"Mortgage guarantees for the construction of private nursing homes...."

It also said the Government should help private groups build health facilities in remote rural areas and mental health clinics and help metropolitan areas plan and coordinate health services.

The report urged "continued Federal support for basic medical research," but said non-Federal sources should provide at least half the total needed money.

It called for strengthening of Federal water and air pollution laws and increased support for radiological health activities under the National Radiation Council.

Vocational Rehabilitation -- The report recommended a steady expansion of the Federal-state program of vocational rehabilitation to a figure "of at least 200,000 (persons) annually."

Welfare Programs -- The report said "we will have to devise methods for transferring pension rights in industrial and union retirement funds" to preserve the mobility of the labor force.

It said "workmen's compensation benefits should be made more adequate" and "unemployment compensation should be liberalized to deal with temporary unemployment and provide for coverage in periods of retraining."

It said public assistance programs should be available "to any person who is hungry, homeless, disabled or sick," but the Federal share of the cost should not be increased. Greater emphasis should be placed on "the prevention of dependency" and "existing limitations on eligibility for aid to dependent children" that put a "premium on broken homes" should be removed.

Health Insurance -- The report said "much remains to be done in the field of health insurance for people over 65.... We reject as unsound...a compulsory hospital and medical insurance law administered as part of the social security system.... Depending upon the rapidity with which effective medical and health insurance programs for the aged are developed by private insurers, it may become necessary for the states and the Federal Government to aid individuals who cannot obtain such post-retirement illness insurance under any private group plan. This agency would purchase such insurance for its participants from non-profit groups and insurance companies."

Economic Progress

The report said "the Republican purpose" in the economic field was to "lift the ceiling over personal opportunity (and) strengthen the floor over the pit of personal disaster."

But it warned that "methods that encourage...dependence on governmental authority are worse than wrong. They are wicked.... It is not enough that legislation be well-meaning, that it generously help those who are in real need. It should do so in ways that do not tempt into dependence and half-effort...."

The report laid down four basic "principles for economic progress:"

(1) "The best means ever devised to plan and organize the production people want is through private initiative exercised in competitive markets.... We reject the idea that Government price fixing, wage control, production planning or materials control make sense in peacetime.

(2) "No...forced distribution of economic gains, and no amount of compulsion or state planning, will make for economic progress in America unless we preserve and enhance the stake for individual effort.

(3) "A dependable dollar is essential to the strong and steady economic growth we seek.

(4) "Government has a responsibility to move effectively against either depression or inflation."

The report raked the Democratic record on economic affairs and attacked the Democratic approach to the attainment of sustained economic growth: "This new cult of forced growth calls for massive Government intervention, mainly through deficit spending programs and super-easy credit. Inflation, the energizing force of this process, is either to be accepted as the cost of seeking higher growth rates or it is to be 'contained' by direct controls on prices, wages, materials, production and trade.... We believe that this whole line of thinking can lead only to trouble for the American people."

On the other hand, the report said, "wise public and private policies...should attain sustained growth in the vicinity of 4 percent a year." The growth "would give us a $900 billion economy by 1976...enable us to keep strong against the critical assault by Communist imperialism...give us the means to remove the last blights of poverty from the land...yield a flow in income large enough to lift the standard of living of the average American family by 50 percent within a generation...."

Agriculture -- Asserting that "the modern family-type farm must remain the backbone of American agriculture in the years ahead," the report said:

"For the six 'basic' crops, we favor proceeding step-by-step toward levels of price support that will move these crops into regular marketing channels and not into indefinite Government storage....

"An interim plan should be considered under which a substantially larger acreage than at present would be voluntarily retired from crop production for the next five to ten years under the conservation reserve program....

"A 'Food for Peace' program should be developed which will help match our agricultural abundance with the unfilled needs of our friends abroad....

"We should press forward vigorously with programs of research to develop new foreign and domestic markets, including new industrial uses, for our farm products....

"The Rural Development Program (to help farmers in low income rural areas) should be pressed as vigorously as is feasible."

Labor -- The report applauded the 1959 labor reform bill (PL 86-257); urged "broader application of fair labor standards, together with strong unemployment insurance and social security systems; advocated "technical and financial aid to areas of chronic unemployment in cooperation with state and local agencies;" and recommended improved education, training, testing, counseling and job placement services.

Business -- The report applauded and urged continuation of Eisenhower Administration policies of "vigorous, impartial enforcement of laws against monopoly" and "encouragement of new and small business."

Power -- The report said, "We favor the teamwork principle in the development of facilities to utilize the Nation's full and practical potential for hydroelectric power.... The Federal Government should not enter the thermal power field by building steam plants.... We also believe that...non-Federal organizations can carry out most of the applied research and development required for the successful utilization of atomic power."

Water -- The report said, "We believe in a vigorous Federal effort, supplementing that of non-Federal organizations, to impound water, to irrigate land, to control floods, and to find an economical way to convert saline and brackish water to fresh.... (We recommend) that every feasible effort be made in the use of reclaimed lands to recognize the problems of current agricultural surpluses."

Minerals -- The report endorsed existing programs "to develop and wisely utilize our own (mineral) resources."

Public Lands -- The report favored "the use of suitable public lands for an expanding program of park and recreational development.... Federal land policy should also recognize the valid claims of grazing, timber, water, mining and industrial activities to use public lands, where these uses do not conflict with a reasonable conservation policy."

Transportation -- The report said there was a need for "better coordination of the varied Federal programs assisting transportation" and "a much closer relationship between the Government's regulatory agencies in the area of transportation."

Control of Spending -- The report said these steps "must be taken in order to reduce wasteful Federal expenditures":

"The President and those Members of Congress who are seeking to check expenditures with a low national priority must have strong support from the public at large against the demands of organized, narrow interest groups.

"We need new legislative procedures that will enable Members of Congress to see, at any time, what impact their actions on individual money bills will have upon the total budget.

"Each budget, when presented to Congress, should indicate the nature of expenditure trends into ensuing years....

"The President should have power to veto individual items in global authorizations or appropriations....

"Consideration should be given to the creation of a continuing citizen body of the Hoover Commission type to review Government operations and make recommendations to increase efficiency."

Balanced Budget -- The report said, "We can and we must pay as we go for the cost of Government.... This does not mean that the Federal budget will never show a temporary deficit.... But deficit financing must not be carried over into periods of prosperity."

Tax Reform -- The report said "major reform" of the tax system "is clearly contingent on the prospect of a surplus beyond the needs of debt retirement." When reform was possible, the committee advocated:

"Some reduction of personal income tax rates in all brackets, even though necessarily small at the outset... bringing down the ceiling surtax rate to a more equitable level; more liberal provisions for averaging of widely fluctuating incomes; a lower tax on capital gains that result from genuine venture investment and withdrawal of capital gains treatment from a number of activities that clearly do not merit it; and better enforcement of collection of taxes on certain kinds of incomes, such as by withholding of tax on corporate bond interest and dividends, if further study indicates its practicability....

"Some modest reduction in the over-all corporate tax rate; more favorable treatment of corporate income under $25,000, for the benefit of new and small business; and improvement in depreciation allowances....

"Federal excise taxes, too, badly need reform.... Congress should consider converting our present selective excises, other than liquor and tobacco taxes, to a more broadly based tax at a rate substantially lower than those in effect. This should be imposed at the manufacturers' level so as not to invade the area of sales taxes upon which state and local governments depend heavily."

Money and Credit -- The report stressed the importance of "an independent Federal Reserve System" and deplored "the steady attack by leading members of the opposition in Congress on the efforts of the System to defend the currency."

It said, "We reject the idea that the Federal Reserve System should resort to a policy of loose money to make it easier for the Treasury to borrow.... The Treasury should, of course, endeavor to keep down interest charges on the public debt. But the best way to cut them is not by manipulating interest rates; it is by reducing the size of the debt.... To facilitate debt management operations, the Treasury should be freed by Congress of statutory interest rate limitations on longer term borrowing."

HOUSE REAPPORTIONMENT

The Census Bureau March 26 estimated the shifts in the apportionment of House seats that will follow the nationwide 1960 census.

Seats in the House are distributed among the states according to a complex formula based largely on population. Since 1911, the size of the House has been fixed at 435 seats, but it rose temporarily to 437 following the grant of statehood to Alaska and Hawaii. In the absence of new legislation, however, the size of the House will go back to 435 seats after the 1960 census.

The allocation of House seats affects not only the size of each state's House delegation but also its influence in Presidential elections. Each state casts as many electoral votes for President as it has Senators and Representatives.

The changes dictated by the 1960 census will become effective in the Congressional election of 1962 and the Presidential election of 1964.

According to the 1959 Census Bureau estimates, 19 seats will be shifted after 1960, with 13 states losing seats and seven -- including Hawaii and Alaska -- gaining. The other 30 states are expected to have the same number of seats they have had since the 1950 census.

States slated to gain seats are: Alaska, 1 (it had none in 1950); Arizona, 1; California, 7; Florida, 4; Hawaii, 2 (it, too, had none in 1950); Michigan, 2; and Texas, 2.

States slated to lose seats are: Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 2; Georgia, 1; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 1; Maine, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Minnesota, 1; Mississippi, 1; New York, 3; North Carolina, 1; Pennsylvania, 3; and West Virginia, 1.

STATE LEGISLATURES

The Research Division of the Republican National Committee in January published statistics on what it called "one of the grimmest aspects of the 1958 elections...the serious Republican losses in state elections."

The figures showed a net GOP loss of 122 state senate seats and 564 lower house seats from their 1956 total. Democrats took control of at least one house of the state legislature away from Republicans in 13 states.

The Research Division showed these figures on the rise and fall of Republican strength in state Governments:

Year	Number of Republican Governors	Number of States in Which GOP Controls Both Houses of Legislature	GOP Members Of State Senates	GOP Members Of Lower Houses
1936	6	8	508	1,847
1946	23	25	881	2,971
1948	18	15	746	2,343
1950	25	22	754	2,566
1952	30	26	857	2,809
1954	21	20	759	2,419
1956	19	17	717	2,506
1958	14	7	592	1,942

In the state legislatures, as in Congress, Democrats held almost a 2-1 membership edge over the Republicans. There were 1,168 Democrats in state senates to 592 Republicans. In the lower houses, there were 3,715 Democrats to 1,942 Republicans.

State figures are given in the chart on the next page.

PARTY RATIOS IN STATE LEGISLATURES

This chart shows the size of the party delegations in the 49 state legislatures (excluding Hawaii) in 1959. Separate columns indicate Republican gains or losses as a result of the 1958 elections and the party of the Governor. The figures were compiled by the Research Division of the Republican National Committee. (See previous page)

1958 RETURNS SET STAGE FOR 1960 BATTLES

The detailed returns on the 1958 elections presented in these pages set the stage for the 1960 Congressional election.

The districts that switched parties in 1958 and those that were won by narrow margins will be the main battlegrounds of the 1960 election.

Congressional Quarterly classifies districts into three groups, depending on the winning candidate's share of the vote:

- Doubtful Districts -- Won by less than 55 percent of the vote.
- Fighting Districts -- Won by 55 - 59.9 percent of the vote.
- Safe Districts -- Won by at least 60 percent of the vote, or without opposition.

As a result of the 1958 voting, the districts are classified this way:

1958	Democratic	Republican	Total
Safe	216	44	260
Fighting	23	48	71
Doubtful	44	61	105
Total	283	153	436

By contrast, this is how the districts were classified on the basis of the 1956 voting:

1956	Democratic	Republican	Total
Safe	151	104	255
Fighting	31	59	90
Doubtful	52	38	90
Total	234	201	435

The 105 current doubtful districts -- the focus of the 1960 House election campaign -- are distributed through 33 states. New York has the largest number of doubtful districts -- ten. Other states with many doubtful districts are: Indiana, eight; California, Iowa and Ohio, each with seven; Kansas, six; Illinois and Pennsylvania, five each; and Connecticut, Michigan, New Jersey, Washington and Wisconsin, each with four.

There are three doubtful districts in Massachusetts and Minnesota; two in Colorado, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, Utah and West Virginia; and one each in Delaware, Kentucky, Maine, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Virginia and Wyoming.

The doubtful districts are marked with asterisks (*) in the chart beginning on page 790.

Highlights of Returns

Some miscellaneous items of the 1958 elections turned up in Congressional Quarterly's statistical analysis:

- Seven Republicans and 12 Democrats were elected to the House by less than 1 percent of the total vote cast in the Congressional district races.

- Eleven Representatives won their seats with majorities of less than 1,000 votes: George A. Kasem (D Calif.), 603 votes; J. Edgar Chenoweth (R Colo.), 543 votes; Harris B. McDowell Jr. (D Del.), 698 votes; Robert B. Chiperfield (R Ill.), 945 votes; George E. Shipley (D Ill.), 187 votes; E. Ross Adair (R Ind.), 267 votes; Earl Hogan (D Ind.), 882 votes; Wint Smith (R Kan.), 233 votes; Thomas F. Johnson (D Md.), 718 votes; Thaddeus J. Dulski (D N.Y.), 726 votes; and Robert E. Cook (D Ohio), 967 votes.

- Only one Senator, Kenneth Keating (R N.Y.), was elected with a majority of less than 1 percent. Democratic Governors in Nebraska, New Mexico and Pennsylvania won with majorities of less than 1 percent, as did the Republican Governors of Rhode Island and Vermont.

- One governorship, one Senate seat and one House race were won by candidates polling less than 50 percent of the vote. In Wyoming, Gov. J. J. Hickey (D) won 48.9 percent of the total vote, defeating the Republican candidate who polled 46.6 percent and the Economy party nominee who took 4.4 percent of the votes.

Sen. Frank E. Moss (D Utah) won his Senate contest with only 38.7 percent of the vote in a three-way race against former Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R) and former Gov. J. Bracken Lee (Ind.), Watkins polled 34.8 percent of the vote and Lee won 26.4 percent, which was the largest percentage polled by any independent or third party candidate in the 1958 election races.

Rep. Wint Smith (R Kan.) won 49.2 percent of the total vote cast in the Sixth District of Kansas, polling just 233 votes more than his Democratic opponent in a three-way race that included a Prohibition party candidate who polled over 1,600 votes.

- In 17 of the 35 Senate races, third party candidates opposed the major party nominees. In New Jersey six other party nominees went on the ballot opposing the major party candidates for Senator. The largest vote polled for a third party Senate candidate was for Corliss Lamont, Independent Socialist candidate for the Senate from New York.

- Minor party candidates were entered in about 20 percent of the House races. In the 13th District of New Jersey candidates of nine minor parties faced the Republican and Democratic nominees.

- Two of the 16 women Representatives were unopposed: Mrs. Iris F. Blitch (D Ga.) and Mrs. Elizabeth Kee (D W.Va.). Eight women received more than 60 percent of the vote: Gracie Pfost (D Idaho), 62.4; Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.), 67.1; Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.), 66.0; Martha W. Griffiths (D Mich.), 60.3; Leonor K. Sullivan (D Mo.), 79.2; Edna F. Kelly (D N.Y.), 64.3; Edith Green (D Ore.), 65.8; and Kathryn E. Granahan (D Pa.), 66.3.

1958 OFFICIAL VOTE IN EACH STATE, ALL CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS

Following is the official vote in each state in the 1958 election for Governor, U.S. Senator, and U.S. Representative as gathered from official state and local sources. In each state, the total statewide vote and the percentage of the vote received by candidates for Governor and U.S. Senator are given. Excluded from these figures are a few scattered write-in votes reported by some states -- in Nebraska, for example, 17 for Governor and 6 for U.S. Senator.

Listed separately, by Congressional District, are the vote and percentage won by candidates for Governor, U.S. Senator, and U.S. Representative in each Congressional District of each state. Within each state the candidates for Governor are listed first, those for U.S. Senator second, those for U.S. Representative third. An asterisk (*) before a candidate's name indicates he won either the statewide vote or led or won the individual Congressional District concerned, as indicated.

An "X" indicates either lack of opposition to a candidate or a minor candidate whose percentage of vote has been computed only on a statewide basis. Most minor party and independent candidates are in this category, although a few (such as McCord in Tennessee and Lee in Utah) were actually major candidates. If more than one minor candidate ran in a given contest, the total minor party vote is given as "other" in the district breakdown.

Percentage calculations are absolute, not rounded to whole numbers; therefore, some sets of percentages will add to 99.9 or 100.1 rather than the conventionalized 100.0.

Acknowledgment

All the data for this special CQ supplement have been gathered and computed by the Elections Research Center of the Governmental Affairs Institute in Washington, publishers of the biennial county-by-county elections handbook AMERICA VOTES and the wall chart ELECTOMAP. Under the supervision of Richard M. Scammon, the Institute's Director of Elections Research, official figures have been brought together from every state and from many local jurisdictions.

In gathering these official materials state officials and local elections administrators have been most helpful, in many instances supplying material down to the precinct and even the "less-than-precinct" level. To all those who helped in pooling these figures, Mr. Scammon and CQ extend their thanks.

WINNING SENATORS' PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL VOTE, 1952-58

The following chart shows the percentage of the total state vote won by Senators elected in 1952, 1954, 1956 and 1958. Percentages for all years are based on final official returns. Percentages of winning Democrats are given in bold type; of winning Republicans in light type. Only 1958 winners' names are given.

X -- No major party opposition.

CQ Fact Sheet On Campaign Spending

HOUSE, SENATE CANDIDATES REPORT $3.3 MILLION SPENT IN 1958

Candidates for the House and Senate reported personal spending of $3,283,655.37 in their 1958 campaigns.

The comparable figure in the 1954 campaign -- the last previous off-year election -- was $3,062,235.65.

Sources of Information

The total was computed by Congressional Quarterly from reports filed with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

Reports were received from 792 Democratic, Republican, Independent and third-party candidates for the House. Thirty-one Democratic and Republican candidates and six New York State Liberal party candidates for the House filed no reports. None of them was elected.

In the Senate, all 36 Democratic candidates and all 35 Republican candidates in the general election, plus four third-party candidates, filed reports.

The official spending reports have two major gaps:

1. Federal law does not require reports of spending in connection with primary elections. Yet primaries in many states are hotly fought and expensive contests, and in some cases may be the only contests.

2. Federal law does not require reports from political committees that operate within the borders of a single state. Many, perhaps most, Congressional candidates handle their campaign finances through committees which are not required to report to Washington, even though they may report in their own states.

A few special candidates' committees did report to the Clerk of the House. Their reported spending, which is not included in the above total, is given on p. 797,805.

Interstate committees of the Republican and Democratic parties, labor organizations and miscellaneous groups are required to report to the Clerk of the House. Their expenditures are reported in detail on pages 806-821.

House Reports

● RECEIPTS -- 289 Democrats said they personally received $974,680.24. 139 other Democrats listed no receipts or said committees handled them.

282 Republicans said they personally received $1,032,096.41. 51 other Republicans listed no receipts or said committees handled them.

Nine independent and third-party candidates said they personally received $5,274.32.

● LABOR RECEIPTS -- 129 Democrats received $223,715.39 from labor groups. Five Republicans received $6,350.00 from labor groups. One independent candidate received $500.00 from labor groups.

(Note: Because of the limits on the reporting system described above, labor receipts may not be identical with the contributions reported by labor organizations on page 806.)

● OUT-OF-STATE RECEIPTS -- 150 Democrats received $125,875.09 from out-of-state sources. 143 Republicans received $115,465.89 from out-of-state sources. Two independent candidates received $110 from out-of-state sources.

● EXPENDITURES -- 329 Democrats said they spent $1,230,471.17. 99 Democrats listed no expenditures or said committees handled them.

311 Republicans said they spent $1,308,487.16. 22 Republicans listed no expenditures or said committees handled them.

Fourteen independent candidates said they spent $8,046.98.

Senate Reports

● RECEIPTS -- 28 Democrats said they personally received $295,292.38. Eight Democrats listed no receipts or said committees handled them.

29 Republicans said they personally received $362,446.08. Six Republicans listed no receipts or said committees handled them.

Three independent candidates said they personally received $4,259.00. One independent listed no receipts.

● LABOR RECEIPTS -- Eleven Democrats personally received $73,325.00 from labor groups. One Republican personally received $925.00.

(Note: Because of the limits on the reporting system described above, labor receipts are not identical with the contributions reported by labor organizations on page 806.)

● OUT-OF-STATE RECEIPTS -- Fourteen Democrats received $50,183.00 from out-of-state sources. Nineteen Republicans received $66,632.00 from out-of-state sources.

● EXPENDITURES -- 31 Democrats said they spent $369,645.94. Five Democrats listed no expenditures or said committees handled them.

32 Republicans said they spent $362,445.55. Three Republicans listed no expenditures or said committees handled them.

Four independent candidates said they spent $4,558.57.

Details of the individual candidates' statements are given on the following pages.

For Other Elections

For summaries of campaign spending reports for previous election years see:

RECEIPTS, SPENDING OF SENATE CANDIDATES

Each candidate for the Senate is required by law to file with the Secretary of the Senate both pre- and post-election reports of his personal receipts and expenditures.

Below is a state-by-state chart showing candidates' total personal receipts, receipts from labor groups, receipts originating in states other than the candidate's own and total expenditures. Total receipts include labor and out-of-state receipts. Only a partial record of out-of-state receipts is possible, as not all candidates listed addresses of contributors.

Candidates report expenditures in two parts. Expenditures which need not be reported individually are those for any charge made by a candidate's state for his candidacy, such as filing fee; any personal expenses of the candidate, such as traveling and meals; and stationery, postage, writing or printing costs (except for use in newspapers or on billboards), distribution of literature and letters and telephone and telegraph costs. These expenditures are not limited and a single sum is reported for all. All other expenditures must be itemized and are limited according to the number of voters in the candidate's state and must not exceed $25,000. Total expenditures in the chart include both itemized and non-itemized expenditures as reported.

Of 36 Senatorial races in 1958, Mississippi had the only unopposed candidate, John Stennis (D). Since candidates are not required to report primary election receipts and expenditures, Stennis reported no money received or spent. Candidates who channeled all their financing through committees also may report no personal receipts or expenditures. Dashes on the chart indicate the candidate reported no personal money received or spent under that heading.

Committees working for candidates are not required to file reports with the Secretary of the Senate unless they are working in two or more states or are a branch of a national group other than a political party. Many candidates appended statements to their reports stating that committees were working in their behalf. These committees often are required to file reports with their state. A number of candidates included reports of one or more committees with their personal reports. Certain committees sent their own reports to the Clerk of the House. A state-by-state listing of available committee reports is on page 797. Candidates represented on this list are marked by an × on the principal chart. Committee report figures are not included in candidates' personal totals.

A list of individuals or groups reported as contributing $1,000 or more to any Senatorial campaign will be found on page 798.

RECEIPTS, SPENDING OF HOUSE CANDIDATES

Each candidate for the House of Representatives is required by law to file with the Clerk of the House both pre- and post-election reports of his personal receipts and expenditures.

Below is a district-by-district chart showing candidates' total personal receipts, receipts from labor groups, receipts originating in states other than the candidate's own and total expenditures. Total receipts include labor and out-of-state receipts. Only a partial record of out-of-state receipts is possible because not all candidates listed addresses of contributors.

Candidates report expenditures in two parts. Expenditures which need not be reported individually are those for any charge made by a candidate's state for his candidacy, such as a filing fee; any personal expenses of the candidate, such as traveling and meals; and stationery, postage, writing or printing costs (except for use in newspapers or on billboards), distribution of letters or circulars and telephone and telegraph costs. These expenditures are not limited and a single sum is reported for all. All other expenditures must be itemized. These are limited by law according to the number of voters in the candidate's district and must not exceed $5,000. Total expenses in the chart include both itemized and non-itemized expenditures as reported.

Candidates are not required to report primary election expenses. Therefore, many candidates who were unopposed in the final election list no receipts or expenditures. Dashes on the chart indicate the candidate reported no money received or spent under that heading.

NUMBER REPORTING -- 792 candidates of the Republican, Democratic and other parties filed either one or two reports with the Clerk of the House. (Candidates who filed no final report are indicated by an asterisk.) In addition 31 candidates of the Democratic and Republican parties filed no report. (Blank spaces follow their names on the chart.)

Committees working for candidates are not required to file reports with the Clerk of the House unless they are working in two or more states or are a branch of a national group other than a political party. Many candidates appended statements to their reports stating that committees were working in their behalf. These committees often are required to file reports with their state. A number of candidates included reports of one or more committees with their personal reports. Certain committees sent their own reports to the Clerk of the House. A state-by-state listing of available committee reports appears on p. 805. Candidates represented on this list are marked by an * on the principal chart. Committee report figures are not included in candidates' personal totals except where a footnote specifically states that this is the case.

FOOTNOTES

(1) Candidate said, "None -- except money expended by me to meet the assessment fee or charge levied on candidates by the laws of the state in which I reside."

(2) These figures consist of monies contributed by and to the United Republican Finance Committee of Los Angeles County and to the Citizens Committee-Di Miceli for Congress and of expenditures by both committees.

(3) Candidate reported receiving $400 "from funds developed through voluntary contributions to Local Union #11, International Union of Electrical Workers, Los Angeles" and $50 from Machinists Lodge #311, Los Angeles. Candidate said, "No contributions were received by me from any 'labor' organization."

(4) These figures include the monies handled by the Breeding for Congress Clubs. Their receipts totaled $9,394.60.

(5) Candidate said figure "includes contributions to volunteer committee".

(6) Representative Christopher died Jan. 23. Randall won special election March 3.

(7) Candidate reported receiving a contribution from the United Steelworkers of America, "amount unknown to me."

(8) These figures include those funds for the Cook for Congress Committee of which the candidate had knowledge.

(9) Candidate said, "Many of these contributions (and expenditures) were to (and by) the Wright for Congress Club."

(10) This amount was turned over to the candidate's committee.

(11) These figures include receipts and expenditures of the Anthony for Congress Committee.

(12) Candidate said, "The campaign committee of the Constitution party to the best of my knowledge spent about $2,500 for billboards and entire state handouts."

(13) Includes $2,750 received from labor committees by Bailey for Congress Committee.

CQ Fact Sheet On Labor's Campaign Spending

WHERE LABOR MONEY WENT IN 1958 CAMPAIGN

Labor organizations put money into political campaigns in all but three states during the 1958 election, according to a Congressional Quarterly analysis of official reports filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Political expenditures by the unions were traced to every state but Arkansas, New Hampshire and South Carolina. The great bulk of the money that was earmarked for specific parties or candidates went to Democrats.

Amounts Reported

Labor unions, like corporations, are barred by law from making contributions or expenditures from their treasuries in connection with Federal elections. If they comply with the law, unions must seek voluntary contributions from their members to finance their participation in partisan politics.

The only national accounting of union political funds are the reports filed with the Clerk of the House. These reports are required from all committees that raise or spend money in more than one state in connection with Federal elections. State and local political committees are not required to report to Washington, but some do so voluntarily.

In 1958, 32 labor organizations filed reports on their political spending with the Clerk of the House. They reported receiving $1,854,634.52 and spending $1,828,777.62. Receipts and expenditures of the 32 labor groups are summarized on page 808.

The $1.8 million reported political spending is certainly just a fraction of what organized labor really spent in the 1958 campaign. Very little of the political spending by state and local unions is included in this total. Some major unions -- the Teamsters and the United Mine Workers, for example -- did not report any political spending. Spokesmen for both unions told CQ all campaign expenditures are handled at the state or local level, where they do not have to be reported to the Clerk of the House.

In general, then, these reports understate total labor political spending. At the same time, they may exaggerate the spending of labor's national political committees by including in the total spending figures what are really bookkeeping transactions.

For example, a payment from the United Steelworkers of America Voluntary Political Action Fund to the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education (COPE) is counted as an expenditure by the Steelworkers. When the same money is contributed by COPE to candidates, it is counted again as an expenditure.

Similarly, the United Auto Workers maintained three separate political funds at different times in 1958. Eliminating the bookkeeping transactions among the funds, CQ was able to compute the Auto Workers' net political receipts at $199,131.24 and net expenditures at $243,789.76.

1954-58 Comparison

The table below compares the reported political spending by Democratic, Republican, labor and miscellaneous political committees in 1954 and 1958.

	1954		1958
	Amount	Percent	Amount	Percent
Republicans	$ 5,509,649	53.4%	$4,657,652	53.7%
Democrats	2,224,211	21.6	1,702,605	19.6
Labor	2,057,613	20.0	1,828,777	21.1
Miscellaneous	520,694	5.0	486,430	5.6
	$10,312,167	100%	$8,675,464	100%

Comparative Figures

Indications are that labor's political spending was more significant in the 1958 election than in the off-year election of 1954.

In 1954, 41 labor committees reported spending $2,057,613.06. That is about $228,835 more than 32 labor committees reported spending in 1958. But the 1954 total included not only the reports of more local committees than filed in 1958 but also $340,000 of "educational account" spending by the CIO Political Action Committee. COPE, the successor organization to CIO-PAC, does not include the cost of its "political education" activities in its political spending reports.

Labor's share of the total reported spending by all Democratic, Republican, labor and miscellaneous committees rose from 20 percent in 1954 to 21 percent in 1958.

In 1958, labor political committees reported more spending than the Democratic committees -- $1,828,777 to $1,702,605.27. In 1954, the Democratic committees reported outspending labor, $2,224,210.93 to $2,057,613.06. (See box this page)

Comparative figures for major labor committees themselves indicate some growth in the scope of labor's political spending.

COPE reported spending $667,984.79 in 1956, the first year it was in existence. In 1958, the sum was boosted to $709,813.34.

The Steelworkers' spending rose from $185,004.27 in 1954, the last off-year election, to $192,136.26 in 1958.

Expenditures from the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League's general fund were $43,445.02 in 1954 and $79,726.63 in 1958.

On the other hand, net spending by the United Auto Workers declined from $255,175.46 in 1954 to $243,789.76 in 1958.

Railway Labor's Political League spent $82,940.23 in 1954 and $78,801.10 in 1958.

Where the Money Went

Of the $1,828,777.90 total spending reported by labor organizations, CQ was able to trace $1,499,454 to the states where it was spent. The remaining $329,323 was either spent at the national level or in such a manner that its ultimate destination was not clear.

The table below shows where the $1,499,454 sent to individual states went:

	Amount	Percent
To state, local labor committees and others	$ 631,650	42.1%
To Democratic candidates and committees	818,174	54.6
To Republican candidates and committees	13,850	0.9
To Liberal candidates and committees (N.Y.)	35,530	2.4
To Independents	250	--
TOTAL	$1,499,454	100.0%

Leading States

As noted above, labor money went into campaigns in every state but Arkansas, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

Pennsylvania was the top-ranking state in labor spending, with $157,310. The fact that eight state and local labor groups filed spending reports in Washington helped swell the Pennsylvania total.

The ten top-ranking states in labor political spending were:

1.	Pennsylvania	$157,310
2.	New York	89,855
3.	California	71,200
4.	West Virginia	64,444
5.	Minnesota	52,120
6.	Wisconsin	51,961
7.	Texas	50,936
8.	Michigan	50,141
9.	New Jersey	49,408
10.	Connecticut	47,827

Senate Candidates

Labor contributions were earmarked for 34 Senate candidates, including two Republicans and one Independent. The Republicans were Goodwin J. Knight of California and Sen. William Langer of North Dakota. (For details on their contributions, see section below on Republicans) The Independent was Dr. Louise O. Wensel of Virginia.

The only Democratic Senatorial candidates who were not identified as receiving labor money were E.L. (Bob) Bartlett, Alaska, who had only token opposition; Spessard L. Holland of Florida, whose primary election opponent, ex-Sen. Claude Pepper (D), received some labor money; John C. Stennis of Mississippi; B. Everett Jordan of North Carolina; Raymond G. Vendsel, who opposed Langer in North Dakota; and Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia.

The largest contributions went to:

1.	William Proxmire (Wis.)	$25,625
2.	Clair Engle (Calif.)	24,950
3.	Harrison A. Williams (N.J.)	20,900
4.	Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)	$19,400
5.	Robert C. Byrd (W.Va.)	19,000
6.	Jennings Randolph (W.Va.)	19,000
7.	Ernest Gruening (Alaska)	16,750
8.	Philip A. Hart (Mich.)	16,600
9.	George M. Leader (Pa.)	16,000
10.	Gale McGee (Wyo.)	15,500

It is notable that of the 10 top recipients of labor money, only George Leader failed to win election, and all of the winners except Proxmire and Gruening captured what had been Republican seats.

Also of interest is the fact that unions reported earmarking only $3,500 for Ernest W. McFarland (D), who opposed Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) in what was supposed to have been the contest unions wanted most to win.

House Candidates

Labor contributions were earmarked for 199 candidates for the House of Representatives, including six Republicans and two Liberals. (For details on Republican recipients of labor money, see section below.)

The largest amounts reported earmarked for individual candidates, all Democrats, were:

1.	Joseph H. Freehill (Va. 10th)	$10,710
2.	Richard Bolling (Mo. 5th)	7,050
3.	Robert J. Mollohan (W.Va. 1st)	6,800
4.	Harley O. Staggers (W. Va. 2nd)	6,450
5.	Emilio Q. Daddario (Conn. 1st)	5,750
6.	Joseph E. Karth (Minn. 4th)	5,500
7.	George H. Christopher (Mo. 4th)	5,250
8.	J. Tim Brennan (Idaho 2nd)	4,850
9.	Ken Hechler (W.Va. 4th)	4,750
10.	Byron L. Johnson (Colo. 2nd)	4,650

Labor had less success with its heavy investments in the House races than it had in the Senate. Freehill, Mollohan and Brennan were defeated, and the other seven won. But only three of the seven winners -- Daddario, Hechler and Johnson -- took over Republican seats.

Republicans

Union political spending reports earmarked contributions for the following Republican candidates in 1958:

Goodwin J. Knight, unsuccessful California Senate candidate, $1,000 from the United Steelworkers, who also gave $2,000 to his opponent, Clair Engle (D).

Sen. William Langer of North Dakota, $5,000 from COPE and $2,000 from the United Steelworkers.

Albert P. Morano, unsuccessful candidate in Connecticut's 4th District, $250 from the Machinists.

Rep. John B. Bennett of Michigan's 12th District, $3,000 from Railway Labor's Political League.

Rep. Gordon Canfield of New Jersey's 8th District, $500 from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and $750 from the United Steelworkers.

Rep. Thomas M. Pelly of Washington's 1st District, $450 from Railway Labor's Political League.

Rep. Thor C. Tollefson of Washington's 6th District, $400 from the National Maritime Union.

Grover Cantrell, an unsuccessful candidate against Rep. Bruce Alger (R Texas) in the Texas 5th District primary, received $500 from the Communications Workers.

A complete breakdown of labor expenditures by individual states and for individual candidates begins on page 809.

AMOUNTS GIVEN BY LABOR TO CANDIDATES AND COMMITTEES IN 1958

The following state-by-state table shows the total amounts given by labor organizations to Congressional and state candidates and political action committees during 1958 as compiled by Congressional Quarterly from the reports filed with the Clerk of the House.

Under each state the total amount received by all candidates and committees is shown first, followed by a breakdown showing the amounts given to Democratic and Republican candidates and labor and miscellaneous groups. Only candidates for a House or Senate seat who received labor contributions are listed according to the office for which each ran. Winners are shown in CAPITALS and names followed by an asterisk (*) were candidates in primary elections who failed to win nomination.

CQ Fact Sheet — On Political Groups' Campaign Spending

POLITICAL GROUPS SPENT $8.7 MILLION IN 1958

Organizations spent a total of $8,675,465.95 for political purposes in 1958, according to reports filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Sixty-four groups -- Republican, Democratic, Labor and Miscellaneous -- submitted records of their financial activities in Congressional and local campaigns. Total receipts for the groups came to $8,767,394.74.

In off-year 1957, 44 organizations reported receipts of $4,167,462.91 and expenditures of $4,661,413.92. In the Presidential election year of 1956, reports filed in the same office listed receipts of 112 organizations as $21,779,106.20 and expenditures as $21,411,633.90. In the last Congressional -- but not Presidential -- election year, 1954, receipts totaled $9,949,378.68 and spending was $10,312,167.19. (1955 Almanac p. 725; 1957 Almanac p. 187; 1958 Almanac p. 747).

1958 Receipts, Spending

Following is a list of the 32 Democratic, Republican and miscellaneous organizations that reported to the Clerk of the House.

After each organization are listed: (1) the location of its headquarters, if not clear from the title; (2) the amount it received, designated either by (c) for contributions or (r) when the amount includes other receipts; (3) the amount expended; and (4) the dates which the report covered where they differ from the calendar year 1958.

Labor -- Reports of 32 labor organizations, as well as a listing of amounts labor designated for specific candidates and parties in the various states, were included in CQ's earlier report on labor's political spending. The 32 labor organizations reported receiving $1,854,634.52 and spending $1,828,777.90 for political purposes. This spending figure is 21.1 percent of total reported spending in 1958. (For details, see p. 806)

Democratic Groups

LABOR GROUPS

Contributions of $1,000 or more came to reporting labor groups from these states: Ariz., $1,102.80; Calif., $7,000; D.C., $32,500; Ill., $2,091.25; N.Y., $2,500; Pa., $2,988.88; Wash., $4,872.20; Wis., $2,300.

STATE BREAKDOWN OF $1,000 DONATIONS IN 1958

Following is a state list of individuals and groups contributing $1,000 or more to political organizations in 1958. (See chart p. 814 for state and party totals.)

This information was obtained from reports filed by the organizations with the Clerk of the House. Of 64 committees submitting reports, 25 noted individual and group contributions of $1,000 or more. These groups are identified after each contribution, according to the key (see box).

The Hatch Act makes it illegal for one person to give more than $5,000 to one group or individual, but permits him to give that amount to any number of different organizations. Family members are regarded individually under the law.

Every state, as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and five foreign countries, had $1,000 donors.

When an individual or group contributed $1,000 or over more than once to the same organization during the year, the separate contributions have been combined.

CQ Fact Sheet

On Congressional Travel

ELECTION YEAR CUT INTO JUNKETING IN 1958

The number of Congressmen traveling to foreign countries in 1958 dropped sharply from the record-setting pace of 1957. A check by Congressional Quarterly of Members' offices and Congressional committees showed that only 42 Senators and 117 Representatives managed to find -- or make -- time in a hectic election year to leave the country on official or semi-official junkets. In comparison, the campaign-free year of 1957 produced 221 junketeers. The travelers and their journeys are listed on page 824. They are summarized below:

Travelers

	Democrats	Republicans	Total*
Senators	23	19	42
Representatives	73	44	117
TOTAL	96	63	159

Where They Went

	Senators		Representatives		Total*
	D	R	D	R
Western Europe	11	15	50	29	105
Canada, Central and South America	9	6	22	18	55
Pacific Islands	2	1	9	3	15
Far East	2	0	7	1	10
Middle East, Africa	1	0	7	1	9
Russia, East Europe	2	0	2	2	6

*The number of places visited is more than the number of visitors because many Congressmen visited more than one area.

Junket Highlights

● HUMPHREY -- Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) made the biggest junket news in 1958 with his exclusive 8-hour interview with Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and his appearance on Russian television. In all, Humphrey's junket embraced the business of two Senate committees, covered 7 countries and 33 days.

● NATO -- The biggest gathering of Congressmen outside of Washington in 1958 was for the November conference of the NATO Parliamentarians in Paris. This conclave, which was held in Washington in 1959, lured 19 Members -- 9 Senators and 10 Representatives -- most of whom went by special military aircraft.

● INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION -- Another attraction in 1958 was the annual meeting of the Interparliamentary Union. Near the end of the session, 12 Congressmen flew to Rio de Janeiro in July to bolster the U.S. delegation. The Soviet Union had sent two jet airliners full of its representatives.

● ATOMS-FOR-PEACE -- One week after Congress adjourned, the 2nd International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy in Geneva was visited by 15 Members of Congress, some members of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, some appointed Congressional advisors and some just interested observers. For many it was the jumping-off place for European tours.

● RESERVISTS -- A few Congressmen do their traveling on active reserve duty with one of the military services. In 1958 8 soldier-lawmakers went to Europe.

● FULBRIGHT -- For the second successive year, Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), the new chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, picked up honorary degrees from universities while abroad. In 1958, Fulbright was honored by the universities of Brussels and Ghent; a year earlier, he was cited by the University of Dijon in France.

● LAME DUCKS -- The fact that some of the lawmakers would not be returning to the 86th Congress was not necessarily a bar to travel on official junkets during 1958. Four House Members -- Reps. DeWitt S. Hyde (R Md.), Henry O. Talle (R Iowa) Karl M. LeCompte (R Iowa) and F. Jay Nimtz (R Ind.) -- took trips at Government expense after they had been defeated for reelection. Three Representatives -- Hubert B. Scudder (R Calif.), Bernard W. Kearney (R N.Y.), Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.) -- and one Senator -- William E. Jenner (R Ind.) -- all went on committee-authorized trips after they had announced plans not to return to Congress in 1959. At least one Congressman -- Errett P. Scrivner (R Kan.) -- turned down a junket, in this case, a request from the Defense Department to journey to the Far East, after he had lost his bid for reelection. Lame-duck study missions frequently produce valuable permanent reports used by Congress.

Origin of 'Junket'

"Junket" has followed a long trail through several languages, according to Webster's New International Dictionary.

The Latin juncus -- meaning "rush" from which baskets were made -- became the Italian giunco. From giunco the Italians developed giuncata -- cream cheese served in a rush or wicker basket.

The English converted giuncata to "junket" -- sweetmeat or any delicate food. (The Oxford Universal Dictionary says "junket" may have originated from Old Northern French words jonket, jonquet or jonquette, all meaning a rush basket.)

"Junket's" meaning was broadened to cover a feast or banquet, a meaning in English the Oxford Dictionary traces back to the 1500s.

In the United States, "junket" evolved from a feast to one of its current meanings -- an "outing or pleasure excursion at public cost."

"Junket" also is used in a broader sense, to mean any journey by public officials -- whether frivolous or business-like, at public expense or not.

CQ uses "junket" in this broad sense, as synonymous with travel outside the continental United States.

Cost of Junkets

Junketing always has been a controversial activity. Its defenders contend junkets help Congressmen to develop first-hand information needed for intelligent legislation, to spread good will and to overcome prejudice and provincialism.

Critics condemn junketing as a waste of time and money that permits some Congressmen to see the world at the taxpayers' expense, makes unreasonable demands of Government personnel abroad, damages U.S. prestige through tactlessness and confuses foreign officials, who think Congressional comments reflect official policy.

No firm cost figures are available. On a commercial basis, a typical Congressman's 30-day tour of Europe would probably cost more than $50 a day, including air transportation. But there is no way of estimating the total cost of Congressional travel.

The only solid figures released give the amount of foreign currency spent. These "counterpart funds" account for only a fraction of the total cost. Furthermore, the figures are given on a committee-by-committee basis, so there is no record of spending by individual members. An amendment by Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.) to the Mutual Security Act of 1958 (PL 477) requiring public accounting of counterpart fund expenditures by individuals was accepted by the Senate, but altered in a Senate-House conference session to require that only total committee spending figures need be reported. (1958 Almanac p. 183)

These are the sources of funds to pay for Congressmen's travel abroad:

• COUNTERPART FUNDS -- Foreign currency is made available by the State Department to any Congressman traveling with his committee chairman's authorization.

Before members of a committee leave the U.S., the chairman notifies the State Department how much foreign currency will be needed. Upon arrival, individual Congressmen sign receipts for the currency. Their expenditures are not audited, but they file vouchers with their committees. The committee totals the vouchers and the chairman reports to the Senate Rules and Administration Committee or House Administration Committee. The report states names of committeemen and staff members who spent counterpart funds, where they were spent, length of stay, amount of currency received, amount spent and purposes of expenditures -- such as lodging, transportation and administrative costs. No provision is made for expenditure of counterpart funds for personal purposes. Expenditures are not itemized in detail. Only committee totals -- not expenditures by individual members -- are reported.

Counterpart funds are a result of U.S. foreign aid expenditures. Nations receiving mutual security aid are required (PL 138, 84th Congress) to deposit an equivalent amount of their own currency. Ninety percent of the currency is reserved for economic and military development of the depositing nation. The other 10 percent is reserved for use by the U.S. Travel money for Congressmen is drawn from this 10 percent share.

Counterpart Fund Use

This report covers junkets during the calendar year 1958. Figures for counterpart fund spending during the first half of the year were made available as part of House and Senate committee reports on counterpart spending in fiscal 1958 -- which ended June 30, 1958. Figures showing counterpart spending for the second half of calendar year 1958 would become available later. In In fiscal 1958, Senate and House committees reported spending a total of $488,285.07 in counterpart funds. Most of this was spent during the second half of calendar year 1957. (1958 Almanac p.753)

The total compares to $291,248.02 for fiscal 1957 and $490,236.45 for fiscal 1956. Overseas travel is generally reduced in the odd-numbered fiscal years, which include the period before the general elections when all the Representatives and many Senators are busy campaigning. Counterpart fund use in fiscal 1958, as reported by the House Administration and Senate Appropriations Committees:

Other Junket Funds

• APPROPRIATED FUNDS -- Some overseas travel is financed by appropriated funds allocated to committees for routine and special investigations. Congressmen file overseas travel expense vouchers with their committee chairmen. The chairmen pass the vouchers on to the House Administration Committee or the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, which transmit them to the disbursing office for payment from contingent funds.

• STATE DEPARTMENT FUNDS -- Diplomatic missions abroad are allocated funds for entertainment. Some of these funds are used to care for the needs of visiting Congressmen, but no information is available on how much. Ambassadors and other State Department officials overseas also spend some of their own money to entertain visitors.

• MISCELLANEOUS FUNDS -- Departmental -- Departments and agencies are required by law (31 USC 22a) to pay expenses of committee members investigating their appropriation estimates and use of funds. Money is appropriated specifically to cover such expenses, which may include entertainment, housing and transportation. Departments and agencies probably care for the needs of visiting Congressmen whether or not they are specifically studying appropriations. Details of expenditures are not published.

Military Transportation -- Congressmen often travel without charge on ships of the Military Sea Transportation Service and planes of the Military Air Transport Service. When their mission is investigation of Defense Department activities, costs of transportation are charged against Defense Department appropriations. When Congressmen investigate other departments, it is not clear if military transportation costs are charged to the investigated department -- as in the case when they travel by commercial transportation -- or if the bill is paid by the Defense Department.

International Conferences -- Congressmen are appointed to U.S. delegations to attend international conferences. Authorizations generally provide for paying their expenses from State Department appropriations.

Foreign Governments -- Delegations of Congressmen sometimes are invited to attend proceedings of foreign parliaments at the expense of the inviting government.

Personal -- Some Congressmen pay all or most of their travel expenses from their own pockets. A Congressman's obligation to pay expenses of family members traveling with him is not clear.

CONGRESSMEN WHO TRAVELED IN 1958 AND WHERE THEY WENT

Which Members of Congress traveled abroad in 1958, and which stayed home? Where did they go and what did they do? Which trips were paid for by the Government and which were not?

Following is a list compiled by Congressional Quarterly of Members of Congress and their foreign trips in 1958. Since figures on the cost of individual trips in most cases are not available, this information is not included. CQ was able to determine the type of transportation (either commercial or military), whether the cost was borne by the Government and the length of time spent outside the United States.

Some Members of Congress file reports on their trips, others do not. Sources for the information were, in 97 percent of the cases, the Members of Congress or their offices.

2 Republicans, 5 Democrats Lead Nomination Races

The seven men whose personal and political histories are summarized on the next four pages are considered the likeliest contestants in the 1960 Presidential nomination race. The voting records of the four Senators and the stands of the other three -- a Vice President, a Governor and a former Governor -- also are presented.

Richard M. Nixon

Vice President Richard Milhous Nixon (R) was born Jan. 9, 1913, in Yorba Linda, Calif. He was graduated from Whittier (Calif.) College in 1934 and from Duke University Law School in 1937. He practiced law in Whittier from 1937 to 1942.

From January to August 1942, Nixon was an attorney in the tire-rationing section of the Office of Price Administration. From August 1942 to January 1946 he was on active Navy duty as a ground officer, most of the time in the Pacific.

Nixon is a Quaker, is married and has two daughters.

The political career he began in 1946 has been one of the most successful and controversial in recent American history. The frequency with which he has identified his opposition as "left-wing" or "radical" has led to repeated charges of "smear campaigning" on his part.

Nixon has displayed a remarkable ability to turn potential political disasters into personal triumphs, as he did in his 1952 television speech rebutting the charge that he had profited personally from a fund raised for him by his California backers.

The early phase of Nixon's political career was identified with the drive against domestic communism, highlighted by his central role in the House Un-American Activities Committee's 1948 investigation of Alger Hiss. But Nixon has also had a continuing interest in foreign affairs, going back to his service on the House Select Committee on Foreign Aid in 1948.

Since becoming Vice President, his knowledge of this field has been substantially broadened by a series of tours of various parts of the world, climaxed by his 1959 visit to Russia, with its public and private debates with Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Although he has had no direct responsibility for any major activity of the Government, Nixon has been given a broader range of duties than most of his predecessor Vice Presidents and has been a full participant in Cabinet and National Security Council sessions. During President Eisenhower's illnesses in 1955 and 1956, Nixon was one of the handful of men who directed affairs of the Executive Branch.

ELECTION RECORD -- Elected to House from California's 12th District Nov. 5, 1946, over incumbent Rep. Jerry Voorhis (D), 65,586 to 49,994.

Through cross-filing in primary, won both parties' nominations for reelection Nov. 2, 1948, with 141,509 votes.

Elected Senator Nov. 7, 1950, over Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D), 2,183,454 to 1,502,507.

Nominated for Vice President July 11, 1952, by acclamation at Republican National Convention in Chicago.

Renominated unanimously Aug. 22, 1956, by Republican National Convention in San Francisco.

Nelson A. Rockefeller

New York Gov. Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller (R), a grandson of John D. Rockefeller, was born July 8, 1908, in Bar Harbor, Maine. He was graduated in 1930 from Dartmouth College, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

Rockefeller is a Baptist, is married, has five children and four grandchildren.

Rockefeller's private career has centered on management of family enterprises, notably Rockefeller Center, and on a wide variety of family philanthropies. In 1957-58, he headed a special studies project of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund which produced four much-discussed reports on the American economy, foreign economic policy, defense policy and education.

Although Rockefeller first sought elective office in 1958, he has had a long career in the Federal Government under both Democratic and Republican Presidents.

From 1940 to 1944 he was Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and in 1944-45 was Assistant Secretary of State in charge of relations with other American Republics.

In November 1950 President Truman named Rockefeller chairman of the International Development Advisory Board, which issued a report urging the U.S. to promote economic development in the underdeveloped countries. Rockefeller resigned in 1951 after the report was issued.

In January 1953, when President Eisenhower took office, he named Rockefeller chairman of the Advisory Committee on Government Organization. He was named Under Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in June 1953 and remained in that post until December 1954 when he became a special assistant to the President for foreign affairs. He resigned from that job at the end of 1955.

Rockefeller made a belated entrance in the race for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in New York in 1958 but rolled up such strength that he forced former Republican National Chairman Leonard W. Hall, who had been the front-runner, to withdraw before the Aug. 25 state convention.

In the fall campaign, in which he began as the underdog, Rockefeller avoided partisan appeals, refused to be drawn into discussion of national political issues, relied on his own personality, pledges to create new jobs in New York state and charges of "bossism" in the Democratic party to win victory.

In his first three months in office, Rockefeller pushed through a reluctant Republican legislature a controversial tax boost designed to put the state on a pay-as-you-go basis, and also spurred enactment of legislation designed to overhaul the state's court system, give tax relief to railroads, improve commuter service and prevent labor union corruption.

ELECTION RECORD -- Elected Governor of New York Nov. 4, 1958, over incumbent Gov. Averell Harriman (D), 3,126,929 to 2,269,969.

Hubert H. Humphrey

Sen. Hubert Horatio Humphrey (D Minn.) was born May 27, 1911, in Wallace, S.D. He was graduated from the Denver College of Pharmacy in 1933, from the University of Minnesota in 1939 and received a master's degree in political science from Louisiana State University in 1940.

Humphrey worked for a time in his family's drug store in Huron, S.D., later taught political science at LSU, the University of Minnesota and Macalester College in St. Paul. He was appointed Minnesota's assistant supervisor of adult education in 1941 and assistant regional director of the War Manpower Commission in 1943.

Humphrey, a Congregationalist, is married and has four children.

Humphrey in the years following 1943 was instrumental in forming a merger of the Minnesota Democratic and Farmer-Labor parties and in purging the latter of its left-wing and Communist elements. In 1947 he was one of the co-founders of Americans for Democratic Action (ADA), which describes itself as a liberal, anti-Communist group, and he has remained an officer of ADA ever since.

Humphrey first came to national prominence at the Democratic convention of 1948, where he led the successful fight for a strong civil rights plank with a still-remembered speech in which he urged the Democratic party "to get out of the shadows of states rights and into the bright sunshine of human rights." The move Humphrey spurred led to the walkout of several Southern delegations and the formation of the States Rights party.

In his 11 years in the Senate, Humphrey has been identified most prominently in the domestic field with civil rights, farm and labor legislation. He is a member of the Senate Agriculture and Forestry, Government Operations and Foreign Relations Committees. A voluble speaker on almost any subject and a prolific bill introducer, he is also known for his work as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee Disarmament Subcommittee. Humphrey's interest in foreign affairs was climaxed by a much-publicized 8-hour interview with Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev in December 1958.

Humphrey was an announced candidate for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination in 1956 but drew only 134½ votes on the first ballot. His Senate term expires in 1960.

ELECTION RECORD -- Defeated for mayor of Minneapolis June 14, 1943, by Marvin Kline (R), 60,075 to 54,350.

Elected mayor of Minneapolis June 11, 1945, over incumbent Mayor Kline (R), 86,377 to 55,263.

Reelected June 9, 1947 over Frank J. Collins (R), 102,696 to 52,358.

Elected Senator Nov. 2, 1948, over incumbent Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R), 729,494 to 485,801.

Reelected Nov. 2, 1954, over Val Bjornson (R), 642,193 to 479,619.

Lyndon B. Johnson

Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) was born Aug. 27, 1908, near Johnson City, Texas. He was graduated from Southwest Texas State Teachers College in 1930 and attended Georgetown University Law School in 1935.

Johnson taught in Houston public schools in 1930-32 and from 1932 to 1935 was secretary to then Rep. Richard M. Kleberg (D Texas). He served as a Representative from 1937 until elected Senator in 1948. Johnson enlisted in the Navy after Pearl Harbor and served seven months as a special emissary of President Roosevelt to Australia and New Zealand before returning to Congress in 1942. Johnson, a member of the Christian Church, is married and has two daughters.

Though his reputation now is that of an expediter of Senate action and a conciliator of differing positions, Johnson's early political record was that of a down-the-line New Deal Democrat. He was something of a protege of President Roosevelt's and had his backing in an unsuccessful 1941 Senate race.

Johnson won his Senate seat in 1948 after the closest primary in Texas history -- a victory that gave him the nickname of "Landslide Lyndon." His opponent charged frauds were committed, but the Senate upheld his right to his seat.

Johnson won a reputation as an advocate of increased military power, was named Democratic whip in 1951 and Democratic leader in 1953. He serves on the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees and is chairman of the Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee.

Johnson had a serious heart attack July 2, 1955, but was able to resume floor leadership when Congress reconvened in 1956. His Senate term expires in 1960, but a law passed by the Texas legislature in 1959 would permit him to run for reelection and for national office simultaneously.

ELECTION RECORD -- Elected to House in special election April 10, 1937, from Texas' 10th District, receiving 8,280 of a total vote of 29,947; second in the nine-man field was Merton Harris, with 5,111 votes.

Reelected in 1938 and 1940 without opposition.

Ran second in 29-man field in June 28, 1941, special election for Senate, losing to W. Lee (Pappy) O'Daniel, 175,590 to 174,279.

Reelected to House in 1942, 1944, 1946.

Nominated for Senate Aug. 28, 1948, in runoff primary over ex-Gov. Coke Stevenson, 494,191 to 494,104. Elected Nov. 2, 1948, over Jack Porter (R), 702,985 to 349,665.

Renominated July 24, 1954, over Dudley T. Dougherty, 883,264 to 354,188. Reelected Nov. 2, 1954, over Carlos G. Watson (R), 538,417 to 95,033.

John F. Kennedy

Sen. John Fitzgerald Kennedy (D Mass.) was born May 29, 1917, in Brookline, Mass., the son of Joseph P. Kennedy, wealthy businessman and former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain (1937-41). He was graduated from Harvard in 1940 and studied at the London School of Economics. He joined the Navy in September 1941, served as a PT boat skipper in the Pacific and was awarded the Navy and Marine Corps Medals and the Purple Heart for his heroism in combat. After his discharge from the Navy in 1945, Kennedy was a correspondent for the International News Service. He is the author of two books, "Why England Slept" and the Pulitzer prize-winning "Profiles in Courage."

Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, is married and has one daughter.

A member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare and Foreign Relations Committees, Kennedy has been most closely identified with labor legislation throughout his 11 years in Congress; the Senate version of the 1959 labor reform bill bore his name. In the foreign policy field, he has stressed the importance of assistance to the uncommitted, underdeveloped countries and the need for flexibility in U.S. relations with Communist satellites.

For Kennedy, politics has been a family affair; his brothers and sisters held political coffee hours for him all over Massachusetts in the 1952 campaign. His brother, Robert, until September the counsel of the Senate rackets committee, is also a political adviser; another brother, Ted, managed his 1958 campaign.

He has been an individualist in politics. In 1947, he was the only Massachusetts Congressman to refuse to sign a petition for clemency for the late James Michael Curley, ex-Representative (D 1943-47) and former Mayor of Boston and Governor of Massachusetts, then in prison for mail fraud. In 1954 he became the first Massachusetts Congressman ever to support the St. Lawrence Seaway bill.

His youthful appearance and his religion caused many Democrats to advise Kennedy to "go slow" in national politics, but despite these supposed handicaps he came very close to winning the 1956 Democratic Vice Presidential nomination. Since 1956, Kennedy has spoken throughout the country to gain the position of front-runner in the 1960 Democratic Presidential race.

Kennedy was forced to leave the Senate in October 1954 for an operation to cure a spinal injury received in World War II. He returned May 23, 1955.

ELECTION RECORD -- Elected to the House from Massachusetts' 11th District Nov. 5, 1946, over Lester W. Bowen (R), 69,093 to 26,007.

Reelected Nov. 2, 1948, without opposition, receiving 106,366 votes.

Reelected Nov. 7, 1950, over Vincent J. Celeste (R), 87,699 to 18,302.

Elected to the Senate Nov. 4, 1952, over incumbent Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R), 1,211,984 to 1,141,247.

Reelected Nov. 4, 1958, over Vincent J. Celeste (R), 1,362,926 to 488,318.

Adlai E. Stevenson

Adlai Ewing Stevenson (D), Governor of Illinois from 1949 to 1953, was born Feb. 5, 1900, in Los Angeles. He was named for his grandfather, the Vice President from 1893 to 1897. Stevenson was graduated from Princeton University in 1922 and from the Northwestern University Law School in 1926.

Stevenson served as an apprentice seaman in the Naval Reserve in 1918. In 1924-25, he was assistant managing editor of the Bloomington, Ill., Daily Pantagraph, which was founded by another grandfather and in which he retains a financial interest. Stevenson began practicing law in Chicago in 1926 and, except for his periods in public office, this has remained his occupation. He is the author of several books.

Stevenson, a Unitarian, married the former Ellen Borden in 1928 and they were divorced in 1949. They have three sons.

His first public post was as special counsel to the Agriculture Adjustment Administrator in 1933-34. He returned to Washington as special assistant to Secretary of Navy Frank Knox from 1941-44 and headed special missions to Italy and Western Europe during that time. From 1945-48 he had a series of diplomatic assignments, as a special assistant to the Secretary of State and as adviser or member of the U.S. delegations to the United Nations.

Elected Governor in 1948, Stevenson won enough renown with a state "reform" program that President Truman urged him to seek the 1952 Presidential nomination, but Stevenson went ahead with his plans for reelection. He was "drafted" for President July 25, 1952, on the third convention ballot.

In the 1952 campaign Stevenson emerged as a witty, eloquent intellectual who worked so hard at avoiding cliches that many critics said he was "talking over the heads" of the people.

On Nov. 15, 1955, he began an active campaign for a second nomination, which came to him on the first ballot Aug. 16, 1956, after he had bested Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) in a series of primaries.

Since his second defeat, Stevenson has spent his time on his law practice, foreign travel and writing and speaking on public affairs. In November 1957, he accepted a temporary appointment as advisor to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles on NATO affairs.

ELECTION RECORD -- Elected Governor of Illinois Nov. 2, 1948, over incumbent Gov. Dwight H. Green (R), 2,250,074 to 1,678,007.

Defeated for President Nov. 4, 1952, by Dwight D. Eisenhower (R), 33,936,234 to 27,314,992.

Stuart Symington

Sen. William Stuart Symington (D Mo.) was born June 26, 1901, in Amherst, Mass. He was raised in Baltimore, enlisted in the Army in 1918 and was commissioned a lieutenant. He attended Yale from 1919 to 1923, later received degrees from Yale and the International Correspondence School.

From 1923-45, Symington pursued a business career. Beginning as a shop worker in an uncle's factory in Rochester, N. Y., he was president of Colonial Radio Co. in Rochester in 1930-35 and of Rustless Iron and Steel Co. in Baltimore in 1935-37. From 1938 to 1945 he headed Emerson Electric Co. in St. Louis, where his production and labor relations records won wide acclaim.

Symington, an Episcopalian, is married to the daughter of the late James Wadsworth, former Republican Senator from New York. They have two sons.

In 1945 President Truman called Symington to Washington for the first of a series of top-level administration assignments. He was Surplus Property Administrator in 1945-46; Assistant Secretary of War for air in 1946-47; the first Secretary of the Air Force in 1947-50; chairman of the National Security Resources Board in 1950-51; and, finally, in 1951-52, "cleanup" administrator of the scandal-ridden Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

He defeated Mr. Truman's choice for the 1952 Missouri Democratic Senatorial nomination, state attorney general J. E. (Buck) Taylor, after a bitter primary in which each man accused the other of spending exorbitant sums of money.

Symington is known chiefly for his persistent advocacy of a stronger defense program. He argued for a larger Air Force both as head of that service and as a Senator and in recent years has been the chief critic of the Administration's missile program.

Symington is a member of the Armed Services, Agriculture and Forestry and Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committees.

The distinguishing character of his political career has been his ability to command a broad range of support. He appeals to businessmen as a former businessman himself, yet his voting record has won him the support of organized labor. His consistent backing of civil rights legislation seems not to have lessened his following in Southern states.

Symington was Missouri's favorite son at the 1956 Democratic convention.

ELECTION RECORD -- Nominated for Senator Aug. 5, 1952, in Democratic primary over J.E. (Buck) Taylor, 368,595 to 180,849.

Elected Senator Nov. 4, 1952, over incumbent Sen. James P. Kem (R), 1,008,523 to 858,170.

CANDIDATES' STANDS

Vice President Nixon has said the 1960 Republican Presidential candidate will run on the record of the Eisenhower Administration, and his own statements largely support Administration policies. As Vice President, Nixon took two important actions in the civil rights field: during debate on changing the Senate's cloture rule Nixon gave an informal opinion coinciding with the position of the group which sought to limit filibusters (1957 Almanac p. 655-656); as chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts he asked heads of 26 Federal contracting agencies to deny further Government contracts to firms practicing racial discrimination. In the economic field Nixon advocated a downward adjustment of business taxes and said the top personal income tax brackets were "almost confiscatory," preventing risk-taking. "Prosperity for the American people is inseparable from prosperity for American business," he said.

Gov. Rockefeller increased state taxes by $272 million in his first budget. He has said he sees no chance for reduction of Federal taxes. His civil rights position is strongly on the side of integration. Rockefeller opposed the Administration decision to continue the halt in nuclear testing and generally has talked a "harder" line toward Russia than has the Administration. Rockefeller opposed "right to work" laws and his New York state labor union regulation bill was less strong than the 1959 Congressional bill.

Stevenson during the 1956 Presidential campaign called for a cessation of nuclear testing. He has said peace and defense were more important than a balanced budget or tax cuts but said he favored relief of those in lowest tax brackets when cuts become possible. He said he believed the U.S. should not veto U.N. admission of Red China nor "continue to thrust Peiping into Moscow's arms." He has taken a moderate line on desegregation.

For more detailed stands of these three candidates, see Supplement to the Oct. 30, 1959 Weekly Report, "Presidential '60", p. 12-17. For positions of the four Senatorial candidates see chart that follows, summarizing their votes on 183 key roll calls since 1953.

Vice President's Votes

Since he became Vice President in January 1953, Nixon has cast six tie-breaking votes in the Senate.

He voted twice to take up a controversial conference report on extension of economic controls in the Defense Production Act. June 18, 1953.

He voted to eliminate mandatory 90 percent price supports for millable wheat. March 9, 1956.

He voted to amend the 1956 Highway Act to provide that state highway departments, rather than the Secretary of Labor, determine locally prevailing wages to be paid workers employed on construction of the Interstate Highway System. May 29, 1956.

He voted to block reconsideration of increasing the interest rate on Veterans Administration GI housing loans from 4.5 to 4.75 percent. March 12, 1958.

He voted to block reconsideration of Sen. John L. McClellan's (D Ark.) "Bill of Rights" amendment to the 1959 labor law. April 22, 1959.

Convention Arrangements

DEMOCRATS TO MEET IN LOS ANGELES; GOP IN CHICAGO

The 33rd Democratic National Convention will begin at 5 p.m. Monday, July 11, 1960, in Los Angeles' Memorial Sports Arena. The platform committee will begin meetings in Los Angeles July 5.

Official Democratic convention headquarters will be in the Biltmore Hotel.

It will be the Democrats' first California convention since 1920, when they met in San Francisco to nominate James M. Cox on the 43rd ballot. (See box below)

In 1956 the Democrats convened on Aug. 13 -- more than a month later than the 1960 date.

Attending the convention will be a maximum of 4,509 delegates and alternates. Their total votes: 1,521. Needed to nominate a candidate: 761 votes. (For allocation of votes by state, see chart beginning on p. 832)

The convention committee on arrangements, appointed by National Chairman Paul M. Butler, will select the keynote speaker, the temporary chairman and the platform committee chairman. It also will make recommendations for the convention's permanent officers.

The 27th Republican National Convention will open on July 25, 1960 in Chicago's International Amphitheater, site of the 1956 Democratic convention. The resolutions (or platform) committee will meet in Chicago one week before the convention begins.

Chicago is the favored meeting place for American political parties; the 1960 meeting will be the 23rd major political convention and the 14th Republican convention to be held there. It was in Chicago that Abraham Lincoln was nominated in 1860 to become the first successful Republican candidate for the Presidency. (See box above)

The Republicans, like the Democrats, in 1960 will hold their convention earlier than in 1956, though the July 25 opening date nevertheless will be the second latest in the party's history.

Official Republican convention headquarters will be in the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

There will be 1,331 delegates and the same number of alternates attending the convention. The total votes: 1,331. The number needed to nominate a candidate: 666.

The Republican National Chairman, Sen. Thruston B. Morton (Ky.), is also chairman of the arrangements committee which will recommend the officers to preside over the convention.

● 1956 CONVENTIONS -- For summaries of the 1956 Democratic and Republican conventions and platforms, see the 1956 CQ Almanac, p. 764, 778.

DEMOCRATIC ADVISORY COUNCIL ISSUES POLICY STATEMENT

The Democratic Advisory Council Dec. 7 issued a statement of policy entitled "Decision in 1960: The Need to Elect a Democratic President." On the 31-man panel that prepared the statement were seven of the party's possible Presidential candidates: Adlai E. Stevenson, Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams, New Jersey Gov. Robert B. Meyner, California Gov. Edmund G. Brown and Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Stuart Symington (Mo.).

Florida Gov. Leroy Collins, newly appointed to the council, and Mrs. Benjamin Bryan Everett, national committeewoman from North Carolina, dissented from a section calling for Federal aid to education, on grounds that this was an area of state responsibility and Federal aid would encourage a slackening of state efforts. The two also dissented to a section recommending Federal action to support the guarantee of civil rights.

The Republican Committee on Program and Progress, headed by Charles H. Percy, presented a corresponding statement, "Decisions for a Better America," Oct. 3-13. (See p. 753)

Highlights of the council's statement follow:

The Eisenhower Administration "has failed to provide the bold and creative leadership required of the United States in the nuclear age," because of the "party's age-old affinity for the moneyed interests, its neglect of the common man, its deep-rooted hostility to new ideas, its distrust of government, its lingering bent towards isolationism...." The council said it expected both houses of Congress to remain Democratic but Congress could not do the job alone. It said a Democratic President was needed to implement these policies:

Economic Policy -- "The first step in the restoration of a satisfactory rate of economic growth must be reversal of the Republican high-interest, tight-money policy." The council said a stable rate of economic growth would net long-run price stability and less price inflation. "The Federal budget and the national monetary and credit policy will continue to be prime instruments for this purpose. A Federal budget fitted into national objectives of balanced production and purchasing power would be a powerful weapon for price stability. The expenditure side of such a Federal budget would reflect the great priorities of our national needs." The tax side could be varied with the existing fiscal situation, leading to a long-run balanced budget.

"We believe the money can be provided" for national security and social needs, "without deficit spending, even under existing tax rates." The council suggested four steps to provide this money:

First, ending the waste in budget expenditures, particularly the high cost of the interest on the national debt, most of which could be eliminated by reversing high interest rate policies; ending duplication and competition among the armed services; and reducing the high cost of the agriculture program while restoring prosperity to farmers.

Second, adding enforcement personnel to the Internal Revenue Service to help save an annual $26 billion owed in taxes.

Third, closing loopholes in the tax laws.

Fourth, expanding the economy, which would produce higher revenues.

"A larger and more equitable share of the Nation's defense contracts" should be allotted to small businesses across the Nation, the council said.

Labor -- The President delayed in acting in the steel strike when "only the employees were pinched by loss of wages." He acted "with the crudest weapon at his command...only when the industry was pinched by a shortage of steel.... Present laws are not adequate to deal with the cases where collective bargaining fails...in industries affected with a great public interest." The law, to encourage settlement of critical industrial disputes, "should provide the President a variety of approaches suited to particular situations, including the appointment of fact-finding boards" empowered to recommend terms of settlement.

The council said the area redevelopment bill, which was vetoed by the President in 1958, should be enacted. This would provide low-interest loans for private industry, creating jobs; areas of rural unemployment should be equally eligible. "Programs of vocational training and retraining need to be stepped up in order that available workers can be matched with available jobs."

Minimum wage law coverage should be extended and the floor be raised from $1 to $1.25 an hour. A comprehensive program to extend existing labor benefits to migrant labor should be enacted. The unemployment compensation system should be "shored up through the enactment of national standards." "Those whose unemployment compensation has expired should be made eligible for Federally aided public assistance." Totally and permanently disabled people should be eligible for social security benefits before they reach 50, the current age minimum.

Education -- State and local governments could not do all that must be done in improving educational institutions, the council said. "Financial assistance from the Federal Government has become imperative.... The main financial responsibility -- and certainly the control of curriculum -- must remain with state and local school authorities."

The council recommended a Federal program to include the following: financial support of local school needs, especially construction aid to meet classroom shortages; college scholarship and loan programs; aid to higher education in preparing physical facilities for enrollment increases; expanded programs of teacher training scholarships; encouragement of research in education methods; adult education and retraining programs to aid adjustments in a changing society; vitalization and expansion of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The council urged the removal of the "loyalty oath" requirement for recipients of National Defense Education Act loans.

Health -- The council recommended the stepping up of medical training, through construction of medical schools, hospitals and related facilities. "Hospital and surgical care should be added to the benefits provided social security beneficiaries, financed by an increase in payroll tax collections." Loans should be made available to local health cooperatives, it said.

Housing -- The 1959 Housing Act should be supplemented as follows: by restoration of a "high and rising level" of private building; stepping up slum clearance and urban renewal programs; expanding family relocation programs for those displaced by Government construction activities; authorizing "as many new public housing units as local communities are prepared to utilize"; including a program of housing for moderate income families; and beginning a "comprehensive program of research and credit assistance to meet the housing needs of American farm families."

Natural Resources -- "Continuing agencies in the Executive and Legislative Branches of the Government (should be established) which will provide the Nation with annual appraisals of each of our necessary resources, including recreational facilities." The council recommended a national water policy including conservation, conversion, storage, inter-basin exchange and pollution programs. It said the Nation needed a "reinvigorated" soil conservation program, a mineral development program, wilderness, lake and seashore systems, an "intensified" forest road program, the establishment of a Youth Conservation Corps and the development of "gigantic electric energy systems" by connecting regional power systems, starting hydroelectric power projects and speeding up Federal research in practical atomic generating stations.

City Problems -- The council said a comprehensive national commission was needed to survey the needs of the country's metropolitan areas and decide whether the Federal Government should move in to help with such problems as air pollution, water supplies, transportation and recreational facilities. Existing programs in urban renewal, construction and stream pollution control should be enlarged and education and juvenile delinquency control programs initiated.

Civil Rights -- Saying the responsibility for implementing constitutional rights belonged to the Executive, the council advocated: vigorous use by the Attorney General of his existing powers to guarantee civil rights to all people; extension of his powers "to initiate civil injunction suits to provide equal protection under the law to all persons"; laws to assure that Federal officials could protect the right to vote in Federal elections; and Federal financial and technical assistance for communities proceeding with integration of their public school systems.

Farm Policy -- The council suggested cooperation with the United Nations in "coordinating the production and utilization of agricultural commodities in this and other countries with a view to making the most effective use of the resources of each country."

Domestically, the farm product supply-adjustment programs could be controlled by the producers themselves, it said, and "greatly reduce and at times actually eliminate the unreasonable and senseless burden upon taxpayers of the present Republican farm program.... These farmer-controlled programs should be accompanied by income supplements, and by other programs needed to guarantee adequate reserves. We must have sufficient supplies to meet the needs in excess of effective market demand during periods of recession and depression."

Welfare -- To help the increasing numbers of the aged, the council said these steps should be taken: increase social security benefits by at least 30 percent over the current minimum payment of $33 per month; provide health care through the social security program; revise the Old Age and Survivors Insurance "retirement test" to allow income-supplementing part-time work; make eligible for social security those in currently covered occupations who retired too early to come under coverage; outlaw age-discrimination in employment in all Federal contracts; expand public preventive health programs to all people over 60; appropriate and use the full amount authorized by the Housing Act of 1959 for housing for the elderly; create an Older Persons Bureau in the Executive Branch.

Culture -- There should be a Federal advisory agency with general authority to assist in formulating plans to develop the cultural resources of the United States. "Legislation providing incentives for those who have the talent to produce cultural assets for the Nation should be enacted by Congress," the council said.

Administrative Agencies -- The council called for "a complete and thorough-going investigation" of the Federal administrative agencies to eliminate inadequate or corrupt administration.

Defense -- "To establish a defense program adequate to the country's needs" the council recommended: the development of a defense structure "of such character that the Sino-Soviet leaders will have no doubt that an attack on the United States would surely be followed by their own destruction"; provision of non-nuclear forces adequate to fulfilling U.S. commitments abroad to deal with "brush-fire" wars; an evaluation of U.S. weapons systems, weeding out obsolete weapons; reorganization of the defense and space organizations to eliminate duplication and inefficiency.

Foreign Policy -- "Our foreign policy must be one of coalition -- of a mighty association of the free. It must mingle power and strength with understanding of others; national self-interest with the self-interest of other nations.... The Democratic party pledges itself to the only sound road to peace -- to a revival and reawakening of our purpose and national power, for the creation of a closely linked society of free nations capable of besting the Soviet Union in the total competition to which it has challenged the free peoples of the world." The council opposed "any retreat from our fundamental commitments in Berlin."

"The achieving of disarmament with inspection and control should have top priority in our policy," it said. The U.S. should not permit "the Communist world to usurp the role of peacemaker.... We should test the sincerity of Soviet intentions by concrete proposals of our own for effective disarmament, each step toward which to be guaranteed by reliable, inspected and enforced procedures under the aegis of the United Nations."

Additional Statements

In addition to its Dec. 7 policy statement, the council Dec. 5-6 issued three separate statements:

Peace Agency -- The council Dec. 5 called for establishment of a National Peace Agency, responsible directly to the President, to deal with problems of arms limitation agreements, international control and inspection systems and advancing living standards in underdeveloped areas of the world.

Economic Policy -- The council Dec. 6 recommended a policy of "secure economic expansion" rather than a tight money policy. It said the Eisenhower Administration had reacted in a "frenzy" to the large deficit in the U.S. balance of payments with "restrictionist and reactionary" proposals. (See p. 190)

Civil Rights -- The council Dec. 6 criticized the Eisenhower Administration on civil rights, saying the President had "virtually abandoned" the Civil Rights Commission and had "frustrated" its efforts to enforce civil rights.

DID PARTIES KEEP THEIR 1956 PLATFORM PROMISES?

The Democrats in control of Congress and the Republican Administration have one more year in which to redeem their party platform pledges made in 1956. How have they done so far? Congressional Quarterly has matched the major 1956 convention platform promises with action taken by Congress and the Administration in 1957, 1958 and 1959.

Some promises were implemented wholly or partially. In some cases, new conditions stimulated action that was not anticipated in 1956. In many cases, accomplishment fell far short of promised action. There still is one year in which the parties can carry out their pledges before drawing up a new set at the 1960 conventions.

In the pages that follow, CQ has listed the specific promises made in each 1956 platform, broken down into categories (Agriculture, Labor, etc.) and followed by a digest of Administration and Congressional action for the past three sessions held since 1956. Highlights follow:

● AGRICULTURE -- Both parties pledged to gain full parity for farmers but the farmers' parity ratio stood at 82 in 1957, 85 in 1958 and 81 for the first 11 months of 1959. The 85th Congress made three second-session attempts at farm legislation before coming up with a bill containing concessions to the Administration's program for easing Government controls on food and fiber production. In 1959, no price support legislation was made law as a result of the deadlock between Congress, which passed high-support bills for wheat and tobacco, and the President, who vetoed them because they did not contain his market-price version. A compromise conservation reserve program was passed and signed.

● EDUCATION -- Neither party lived up to its pledge to provide Federal aid to school construction. The Republican platform urged a five-year Federal school construction program. Although the President asked for construction aid in 1957, he did not mention it in 1958 and, in 1959, he changed the request to one for Federal support for local school bonds. The Democratic platform also backed "legislation providing Federal financing to assist states and local communities to build schools." The House in 1957 killed a school construction bill by a vote of 208-203 (D 97-126; R 111-77). Some supporters of the bill charged that President Eisenhower, who himself had requested the program, had reneged on his pledge to back the bill. The 1959 session ended with a school construction bill bottled up in the House Rules Committee.

● CIVIL RIGHTS -- Both parties included civil rights planks in their 1956 platforms. In 1957, Congress passed its first civil rights legislation in 75 years, with the vigorous support of President Eisenhower. The bill which was finally approved was a modified version of the Republican bill with Democratic changes including a jury trial amendment. The Civil Rights Act of 1957 also set up a bi-partisan commission to look into violations of the law's provisions. Despite pressure for further civil rights legislation in 1959, the only action was extension for two years of the Civil Rights Commission.

● STATEHOOD -- Statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska was endorsed by both parties. Congress voted to make Alaska the 49th state of the Union in 1958 and Hawaii the 50th in 1959.

● LABOR -- The Republicans' platform pledge regarding labor has been more nearly followed by the Administration and Congress than the Democrats' promises. The latter said "we unequivocally advocate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act...." Republicans promised to "...revise and improve the Taft-Hartley Act so as to protect more effectively the rights of labor unions, management, and the individual worker and the public." The labor reform law adopted in 1959 strengthened the Taft-Hartley Act and contained a "bill of rights" for union members. Strongly supported by the Administration, the final version passed the House 352-52 (D 214-51; R 138-1).

● FOREIGN AID -- The Democrats called for a "realistic reappraisal" of the foreign aid program while the Republicans pledged to "continue to support the collective security program." Administration requests for appropriations for the Mutual Security Program were cut by Congress in each of the three following years: 1957, from a request of $3.9 billion to an appropriation of $2.8 billion; 1958, a $3.9 billion request to a $3.3 billion appropriation; 1959, a $3.9 billion request to a $3.2 billion appropriation. An Administration attempt to put the program on a long-term basis in 1957 was defeated. In 1959 the President opposed a proposal made by Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) that the Development Loan Fund be authorized to borrow $7.5 billion over a five-year period.

PRICE SUPPORTS

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "Undertake immediately...to regain full 100 percent of parity the farmers received under the Democratic administrations. We will achieve this by means of supports on basic commodities at 90 percent of parity and by means of commodity loans, direct purchases, direct payments to producers, marketing agreements and orders, production adjustments or a combination of these.... Develop practical measures for extending price supports to feed grains and other non-basic storables and to producers of perishable commodities such as meat, poultry, dairy products and the like."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "Our objective is markets which return full parity to our farm and ranch people when they sell their products." Pledges "to provide price supports as in the Agricultural Act of 1954 (flexible or sliding scale supports)...to continue our commodity loan and marketing agreement programs...to make every effort to develop a more accurate measurement of farm parity...to work for improved farm prices and income."

Performance

Full parity for farmers was not achieved during the period 1953-1959. (Parity is the ratio between prices paid by farmers -- including interest, taxes and wage rates -- and prices received by farmers for their agricultural products. If prices received are lower than prices paid, then the parity ratio is below 100 percent and it is not "full parity.") The farmers' parity ratio for the past ten years:

ADMINISTRATION

1957 -- The Administration made no legislative requests for agricultural price support or parity legislation.

1958 -- President Eisenhower requested legislation to ease Government controls on food and fiber production. Specifically, the Administration asked for reductions in price support payments to a range of 60 to 90 percent of parity for wheat, corn, cotton, rice, peanuts, dairy products and tobacco; termination of the acreage reserve part of the soil bank program at the end of the 1958 crop year and elimination of the "escalator" clauses governing price supports on basic commodities. It also asked for authority to increase acreage allotments for cotton, wheat, rice, peanuts and tobacco, up to 50 percent above the levels determined by existing formulas.

1959 -- President Eisenhower, in his Jan. 29 farm message, recommended that support prices for all commodities under mandatory supports be related to a percentage of the average market price of a commodity for the immediately preceding years, rather than to the parity standard which reflects cost-price relationships of a previous period, usually 1910-14. Under the proposal the "appropriate" percentage for a support level would be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at between 75 percent and 90 percent of the average. This would in effect provide lower supports than by parity. The President, in addition, proposed that if Congress still preferred to retain the parity concept in determining price supports, the Secretary should then be allowed broad flexibility -- ranging from 0 to 90 percent of parity -- in setting support levels. Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, in a memorandum which accompanied the President's message, detailed Mr. Eisenhower's recommendations for wheat, tobacco and peanuts. A new wheat program, Benson said, should also provide for eventual elimination of acreage allotments and marketing quotas. He said, however, that if Congress retained the control concept in the wheat program it was "essential" to tighten controls and close loopholes in order to reduce production and regain balance between supply and demand.

CONGRESS

1957 -- The House and Senate rejected similar bills (HR 4901, S 1771) for emergency aid to major corn producing areas. Efforts to include benefits for producers of small feed grains -- principally oats, rye, barley, grain sorghums and corn grown in non-commercial areas -- also were defeated. The House March 13 rejected HR 4901, 188-217 (D 63-156; R 125-61). The Senate April 10 rejected S 1771, 35-45 (D 15-26; R 20-19).

1958 -- Congress three times attempted to pass farm legislation before coming up with a bill containing concessions to the Administration's program. President Eisenhower March 31, 1958 vetoed a bill (S J Res 162) that would have barred reductions in acreage allotments for two years. The Senate's version of the bill, passed March 13, 50-43 (D 39-8; R 11-35), provided for a permanent ban on price support and acreage allotment reductions. The House amended the bill to provide a two-year freeze on allotments and voted to pass it, 211-172 (D 167-31; R 44-141), March 20. The Senate agreed to the House version by voice vote.

The House Agriculture Committee then put together a bill, based on its Subcommittees' recommendations, providing for increased price supports for rice, cotton, wheat, dairy products and some other feed grains. Opposed by the Administration, the bill (HR 12954) was killed on the House floor when the House rejected the open rule (H Res 106) providing for the bill's consideration, 171-214 (D 150-52; R 21-162), June 26.

The final and eventually successful attempt at farm legislation originated from the Senate Agriculture Committee. As passed by the Senate, 62-11 (D 25-11; R 37-0), the bill (S 4071) was acceptable to the Administration. But it was amended by the House Agriculture Committee to raise several price supports and the revised version was brought to the House floor under a rule barring amendments with passage requiring a two-thirds majority. The House again refused to accede to a farm bill when an attempt to pass it failed, 210-186 (D 172-38; R 38-148), Aug. 6. Passage required 264 "yeas." The House by voice vote Aug. 13 finally passed a bill that had been revised to accord with the Administration's program. The Senate agreed by voice vote to the House version Aug. 18. As approved, the bill met most of the Administration's requests. The final bill: prevented scheduled reductions in cotton and rice acreage in 1959; permitted cotton producers agreeing to accept lower price supports to expand production for the next two years; provided that price supports for cotton and rice would be lowered gradually to 65 percent of parity by 1962 (the previous floor was 75 percent); abolished the so-called escalator clause, under which price supports rose as surpluses declined and gave corn growers the choice (by referendum) between the existing acreage allotment system and one that would permit uncontrolled production at the higher of two price support levels; 65 percent of parity or 90 percent of the average market price for the previous three years. The farmers Nov. 25 chose the latter plan. The bill also extended the Wool Act of 1954 for three years and continued incentive payments to domestic wool growers.

1959 -- Congress passed wheat and tobacco bills that were vetoed by the President. No attempt was made to override the vetoes. Concerning wheat, the Senate May 22 passed by a standing vote an amended bill (S 1968) providing growers for the 1960 and 1961 crops a choice of three courses: (1) planting their full acreage allotment and receiving a support price of 65 percent of parity, (2) reducing their allotment by 10 percent and receiving 75 percent of parity (the current support level), or (3) reducing their allotment 20 percent and receiving 80 percent of parity.

The House version, passed June 12 by a 189-177 roll-call vote (D 177-63; R 12-114), offered wheat growers also for 1960 and 1961 crops two different alternatives: a choice between receiving 90 percent of parity price supports in return for reducing acreage allotments by 25 percent, or receiving 50 percent of parity with unlimited production. Both the Senate and House versions were dropped in conference in favor of a formula that would provide 80-percent supports for a 20 percent cut in acreage. The Senate June 17 agreed by voice vote to the conference version, but the House June 18 voted 202-214 (D 195-71; R 7-143) to reject it, insisting on its own version. On June 22 the Senate agreed, 44-40 (D 41-12; R 3-28) to accept the House version, thus sending it to the White House. The President vetoed the measure June 25.

The Senate May 21 by voice vote passed a bill (S 1901) to stabilize price supports for most types of tobacco at the dollars and cents level for 1958 until 90 percent of parity, computed by the old method of determining parity, exceeded the 1958 level. Subsequently, the support price would be based on 90 percent of the old or new method of determining parity, whichever was lower, but not less than the 1958 dollars and cents level. The House passed the measure June 10, by a 250-149 roll-call vote (D 218-39; R 32-110). S 1901 also was vetoed June 25 by the President.

SOIL BANK

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We pledge to support continued improvements in the soil bank program...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "Our Republican Administration fostered a constructive soil bank program further to reduce surpluses and to permit improvement of our soil, water and timber resources."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

The Administration in 1957 asked for funds to carry out the fiscal 1957 and 1958 soil bank program authorized in 1956. When the House agreed to an amendment to deny funds for the 1958 acreage reserve program, Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson said the move represented "false economy" and amounted to prejudgment based on insufficient trial.

In 1959, the Administration requested $361,420,000 in appropriations to carry out the fiscal 1960 soil bank, conservation reserve program. It also requested a $375 million advance authorization for the program in the 1960 crop year.

CONGRESS

The Senate voted in 1957 to go along with its Appropriations Committee and provide funds for the Agriculture Department to enter into soil bank acreage reserve contracts during 1958. The House earlier had approved an amendment to the Agricultural Appropriation Bill to deny funds for the program in fiscal 1958; it would have had the effect of killing the acreage reserve program at the end of 1957.

The House amendment to deny use of funds for an acreage reserve program on 1958 crops was accepted by a House roll-call vote of 192-187 (D 154-46; R 38-141) on May 15.

A Senate amendment to bar use of funds for the 1958 soil bank program and limit reserve payments to $2,500 per producer was rejected June 11 by a roll-call vote of 7-71 (D 5-37; R 2-34).

The House and Senate Aug. 1 agreed to a conference version of the bill that kept a $500 million authorization for acreage reserve payments in 1958, but also set a Sept. 15, 1958, deadline for payments, as insisted on by House conferees. They also insisted on a $3,000 limit on acreage reserve payments to any one producer, rather than $2,500 originally proposed by the House and $5,000 proposed by the Senate.

In 1959, Congress approved a compromise $335 million appropriation for the CRP in fiscal 1960 compared to the House-approved figure of $310 million and the Senate's $340 million. Congress also agreed to a CRP advance authorization of $375 million for 1960 -- the amount requested by the Administration -- compared to $325 million authorized by the House and $450 million by the Senate. Congress also limited to $5,000 annual CRP payments to any individual or corporation, the same limitations as proposed by the Senate, compared to $3,000 that had been approved by the House.

Education and Welfare

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "Federal aid (to education) and action should be provided, within the traditional framework of state and local control. We pledge the Democratic party to...legislation providing Federal financing to assist state and local communities to build schools.... The Democratic party pledges itself to a bold and imaginative program devised to fully utilize the brain power of America's youth as a guarantee of unquestioned supremacy in the scientific and technical fields. Scholarships and loan assistance...must be employed to secure these objectives."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- The Republican Administration urged (in 1956) "a five-year program of Federal assistance in building schools to relieve a critical classroom shortage. The Republican party will renew its efforts to enact a program based on sound principles of need and designed to encourage increased state and local efforts to build more classrooms...(and) is determined to press...actions that will help insure that every child has the educational opportunity to advance to his own greatest capacity.... We pledge ourselves to stimulate and encourage the education of our young people in the sciences with a determination to maintain our technological leadership."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

President Eisenhower in 1957 requested, as he had in 1955 and 1956, a Federal aid to schools program. His 1957 program requested authorization of $1.3 billion, at the rate of $325 million annually for four years without restricting funds for racially segregated schools. The President in 1958 did not repeat his aid-to-school-construction request, but on Jan. 27 asked Congress for a Federal program to bolster science and language training through a program of scholarships and loans. He also asked for matching grants to improve high school guidance facilities, graduate fellowships, money to improve the teaching of science and mathematics and more money for the National Science Foundation.

In 1959, the Administration requested a $2 billion, long-term program of equal Federal-state matching grants to help needy school districts pay principal and interest charges (debt service) on 20-30 year school construction bonds to be issued by the districts.

CONGRESS

In the first session of the 85th Congress, the House killed a compromise school construction bill (HR 1) to authorize $1.5 billion in Federal grants to the states, half on the basis of need, half to be distributed on a per capita basis. No bill was considered in the Senate. The House July 25, 1957 accepted a motion to strike the enacting clause from (in effect, kill) HR 1, 208-203 (D 97-126; R 111-77).

In 1958, Congress enacted a bill (HR 13247) that, in its final version, would merely loan money to college students through their colleges and universities. The bill, as reported to the House by its Education and Labor Committee, carried a provision for 23,000 scholarships of $1,000 each year for four years. The House agreed to cut the number of scholarships to 10,000 at $1,000 each, the amount requested by the President, then eliminated the scholarship provision entirely and voted to transfer the funds to a loan program. An Aug. 8 move to kill the bill was rejected, 140-233 (D 45-147; R 95-86), and the bill was passed by voice vote.

Although neither the Administration nor the Democratic leadership supported school construction funds in 1958, a move in the Senate to add $1 billion yearly for two years to the National Defense Education Act of 1958 Aug. 13 was proposed and rejected, 30-61 (D 23-24; R 7-37). Acting on the original version the Senate accepted, 46-42 (D 14-31; R 32-11), an amendment to cut the scholarship award amount from $1,000 to $250 yearly. The Senate then passed HR 13247, 62-26 (D 35-10; R 27-16). In its final version, the act carried no scholarships. It authorized $887 million to go for long-term low-interest loans, matching grants for scientific teaching aids, a high school career testing training program for teachers and for a program to subsidize language teaching. It also authorized funds for graduate fellowships, vocational training and improvement of educational statistics gathering. The conference report on the bill was agreed to Aug. 22 by the Senate, 66-15 (D 37-7; R 29-8) and Aug. 23 by the House, 212-85 (D 140-30; R 72-55).

Congress in 1958 also voted to give the National Science Foundation $130 million to improve science education and expand basic research -- $10 million less than the President asked for.

The first session of the 86th Congress ended with a stalemate over education bills. A bill (HR 22) calling for a $4.4 billion, 4-year program of direct Federal grants to the states for school construction and teacher salaries was bottled up in the House Rules Committee. S 8, drafted by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee when HR 22 appeared doomed in the House, was reported Sept. 12 (S Rept 1011). S 8 called for an emergency $1 billion two-year program of Federal matching grants to the states for school construction only.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We shall continue our efforts to broaden and strengthen (the social security)...program by increasing benefits to keep pace with improving standards of living; by raising the wage base upon which benefits depend; and by increasing benefits for each year of covered employment...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We shall continue to seek extension and perfection of a sound social security system."

ADMINISTRATION

There were no specific requests for social security legislation during the 85th Congress, although in 1958 President Eisenhower asked for a reduction in the Federal share of public assistance payments.

In 1959 the President asked for increased state and local participation in the financing of public assistance programs.

CONGRESS

There was no action on social security legislation in the first session of either the 85th or the 86th Congress. In 1958 Congress passed a bill (HR 13549) liberalizing social security just as it had in the past four election years. The bill raised social security benefits and payments by approximately 7 percent and increased the Federal share of public assistance payments in some states at an estimated annual cost of $197 million. HR 13549 was accepted 374-2 (D 199-0; R 175-2) by the House July 31 in its original form under a closed rule barring amendments. Administration-opposed public assistance increases, however, were modified by the Senate Finance Committee. The Senate Aug. 16 rejected 32-53 (D 26-20; R 6-33) a move to increase social security benefits from the 7 percent provided in the bill to 10 percent and then passed the bill 79-0 (D 42-0; R 37-0). The House Aug. 19 agreed to the Senate's modified version by a voice vote.

HEALTH

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We pledge ourselves to initiate programs of Federal financial aid, without Federal controls, for medical education. We pledge continuing and increased support for hospital construction programs, as well as increased Federal aid to public health services, particularly in rural areas...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We have fully resolved to continue our steady gains in man's unending struggle against disease and disability.... We demand once again, despite the reluctance of the Democratic 84th Congress, Federal assistance to help build facilities to train more physicians and scientists. We have encouraged a notable expansion and improvement of voluntary health insurance, and urge that reinsurance and pooling arrangements be authorized to speed this progress."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Research -- In 1957 and 1958 requested temporary legislation under which the Federal Government could help give medical and dental schools more teaching, research and training facilities. The program was to replace a three-year, $90 million program approved by Congress in 1956. In 1959 requested reduction in new spending authority for grants for construction of health research facilities, and gave a highly qualified endorsement to a Senate "Health for Peace" bill to establish an international medical research program.

An agreement for U.S.-Soviet joint health research projects, covering studies in cancer, heart disease and poliomyelitis, was announced following talks with Soviet medical leaders during the U.S. visit of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Hospital Construction -- In 1958 requested that the Federal hospital construction grant program be modified to meet "only the most urgent needs," and supported extension of the program. In 1959 requested reduction in new spending authority for grants for construction of local public and private hospitals.

Training -- In 1959 requested extension of programs for training of professional nurses and for graduate training of public health personnel beyond their expiration dates of June 30, 1959.

Food and Drug Administration -- In 1959 requested strengthening of Food and Drug Administration programs.

Health Insurance -- In 1957 asked that smaller health insurance companies and non-profit associations be permitted to pool resources and experience to develop improved health insurance coverage. In December 1959 Secretary Arthur S. Flemming of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said he was "confident" his department would be able to present a "positive program" on medical care for the aged in 1960.

CONGRESS

Research -- In the 1957 Labor-Health, Education and Welfare Appropriation bill, Congress voted to allocate $21 million more than the President had requested for the research activities of the National Institutes of Health. In 1958 Congress voted to authorize annual matching grants of $30 million to the states to build research centers but the bill (HR 12876) failed to include a provision for the Administration-supported grants for medical educational facilities. In 1959 the Senate passed a bill (S J Res 41) to establish a "Health for Peace" program of international medical research, at an annual cost of $50 million. The bill was sponsored by Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) and had 63 co-sponsors. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee shortly before adjournment announced it would postpone any action on the bill until 1960. In passing the fiscal 1960 appropriation bill for the Departments of Labor, Health, Education and Welfare Congress granted the National Institutes of Health $106 million more than Administration requests, for a total of $400 million. In signing the bill, President Eisenhower established certain criteria for allocation of funds -- a move viewed as an indication he might freeze some NIH funds, as he had in fiscal 1958.

Hospital Construction -- Congress in 1958 enacted a law that extended the Hospital Survey and Construction Act (Hill-Burton) for five years, until June 30, 1964. The extension authorized a total of $211 million in annual Federal grants, to be matched by the recipients, for the construction of general hospitals and other health facilities. There was no modification of the program, despite the Administration's request. In 1959 Congress in the fiscal 1960 Labor-HEW appropriation bill added $85 million to Administration requests for Federal aid in hospital construction, for a total of $186 million.

Training -- In 1959 extended for five years, through June 30, 1964, programs for graduate training of professional public health personnel and advanced training of professional nurses.

Food and Drug Administration -- In 1959 Congress passed legislation (S 79) amending the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act to permit, until Sept. 1, 1961, the artificial coloring of skins of mature oranges with a coloring agent known as Citrus Red No. 2 under tolerances found safe by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

Health Insurance -- No action was taken in 1957 or 1958. In 1959 a measure was sent to the President (S 2162-- PL 86-382) establishing a prepaid, voluntary health insurance program for Federal workers and their families, with the Government paying one-half of the annual cost. A highly controversial proposal to incorporate a program of health insurance for the aged in the social security system received House Ways and Means Committee hearings but no further action.

HOUSING

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We pledge...immediate revival of the basic housing program enacted...in 1949, to expansion of this program as our population and resources grow and to additional legislation to provide housing for middle-income families and aged persons.... We favor increasing the Federal share of the cost of (urban redevelopment and renewal) programs.... We pledge that the housing insurance and mortgage guarantee programs will be redirected in the interest of the home owner and that the availability of low-interest housing credit will be kept consistent with the expanding housing needs of the Nation.... We favor providing aid to urban and suburban communities in better planning for their future development and redevelopment.... The Republican Administration has sabotaged (the goal of the 1949 Housing Act) by reducing the public housing program to a fraction of the Nation's need."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We are proud of and shall continue our far-reaching and sound advances in matters of basic human needs (including)...improved housing.... We have supported measures that have made more housing available than ever before in history, reduced urban slums in local-Federal partnerships, stimulated record home ownership and authorized additional low rent public housing."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

1957 -- The Administration requested that Congress authorize $250 million for special assistance mortgage purchases by the Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA); allocate $50 million of new FNMA purchase authorization for cooperative housing mortgages; permit FNMA to purchase $300 million in whole mortgages; authorize Government purchase of $100 million of FNMA preferred stock; authorize FNMA to borrow $700 million from the Treasury, half in fiscal 1957, half in fiscal 1958; exempt small communities from qualifying restrictions for Federal aid in public housing programs and authorize an additional $250 million a year for two years for community redevelopment and slum clearance.

1958 -- The Administration asked Congress to remove interest rate limitations on Federal Housing Administration-insured loans for rental projects and cooperative housing; revise ceilings on interest rates and remove discount controls on FHA-insured mortgages; authorize funds in 1958 for a six-year program of urban renewal; require states and localities to provide an increasing share of urban renewal projects costs; extend the existing authorization for 70,000 public housing units and repeal the requirement that all mortgage purchase commitments made by FNMA be made at par value.

1959 -- The Administration proposed that Congress eliminate temporary emergency housing provisions; remove the ceiling on the volume of FHA-insured mortgages; make no new authorization for additional public housing units; establish a new insurance program for mortgages on housing rentals for the elderly; authorize higher interest rates for armed services housing and extend the mortgage program for one year; extend the veterans' voluntary home mortgage credit program and raise the interest rate on VA insured loans; raise the statutory interest rates on college housing loans, authorize a limited loan guaranty for the college housing program but deny loans to those colleges qualified to issue tax exempt securities; authorize $1.35 billion over a six year period for urban renewal and by 1963 reduce to 50 percent Federal Government participation in local urban renewal projects.

CONGRESS

1957 -- With the exception of an Administration request for higher interest rates on college loans, all Administration housing requests were included in some form in the $1.9 billion housing bill (HR 6659) that received final approval in the House June 28 and in the Senate July 1, 1957. The legislation authorized the FHA to lower the minimum down-payment requirements on mortgages it insured and to "fix reasonable limits" on mortgage discounts.

1958 -- An "emergency" housing bill (S 3418) glided through Congress as an "anti-recession" measure. The bill contained only one Administration housing request -- it provided for revised interest rate ceilings and the removal of discount controls on FHA-insured mortgages. It created a new FNMA revolving fund of $1 billion for the purchase of FHA and GI mortgages of up to $13,500, raised from $450 million to $950 million the FNMA fund to be allocated by the President for purchase of FHA and GI mortgages. It also raised the ceiling on GI home loan interest rates from 4.5 to 4.75 percent, provided that the GI rate remained at least one-half percent below the FHA rate. S 3418 was passed by the Senate, 86-0 (D 42-0; R 44-0), March 12. The House March 19 passed the bill under suspension of the rules by voice vote.

A broad omnibus housing bill (S 4035) was passed by the Senate by voice vote July 11 after it had been amended to cut nearly $500 million worth of authorizations. The measure, strongly opposed by the Administration, was modified by the House Banking and Currency Committee but still was denounced by Housing and Home Finance Agency Administrator Albert M. Cole. S 4035 was killed in the House Aug. 18 when it failed to get a two-thirds majority under suspension of the rules. The vote: 251-134 (D 185-23; R 66-111) (257 "yeas" were required for passage).

1959 -- After two vetoes, Congress Sept. 10 sent to the President a housing bill (S 2654) which he was willing to accept. The bill made three major concessions to the President: it extended indefinitely an $8 billion increase in FHA authority to insure mortgages, dropped a $50 million loan fund for college classrooms and spread over two years a $650 million authorization for urban renewal grants. Additional major provisions of S 2654 included liberalized features of the slum clearance program, establishment of a $50 million fund for housing for the elderly, increased the college housing loan fund by $250 million and authorized an additional 37,000 public housing units. S 2654 was passed Sept. 9 by the Senate, 86-7 (D 54-5; R 32-2). The House passed it by voice vote Sept. 10.

The first housing bill (S 57) which the President vetoed July 7 contained 15 sections objected to by the Administration. Major provisions included an additional $5 billion FHA mortgage insurance authority, $50 million for housing for the elderly, an additional $900 million for the Urban Renewal Administration and an extension of the program for two years, $62.5 million for college classrooms and 45,000 additional public housing units. The conference report on S 57 was passed by the Senate 56-31 (D 48-8; R 8-23) June 22. The House adopted the report 241-177 (D 222-51; R 19-126) June 23. The Senate failed to override the veto 55-40 (D 53-10; R 2-30) Aug. 13 (64 "yeas" were required to override).

The second housing bill (S 2539) was criticized by President Eisenhower in his Sept. 3 veto message on the same grounds on which he objected to the first -- that it was too expensive and would do more damage than good. The objectionable items included a $50 million loan program for college classrooms, a $50 million housing program for the elderly, authorization for 37,000 new public housing units, $650 million for urban renewal, extending the program for one year, limiting the $8 billion increase in FHA mortgage insurance authority to one year. The Senate vote: 71-24 (D 55-7; R 16-17) Aug. 18. The House vote: 283-106 (D 229-29; R 54-77) Aug. 27. The Senate failed in a second attempt to override a housing veto by 58-36 (D 52-9; R 6-27) Sept. 4 (63 "yeas" were required).

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We unequivocally advocate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.... We feel it imperative to raise the minimum wage to at least $1.25 an hour.... We further pledge as a matter of priority to extend full protection of the (minimum wage law)...to all workers engaged in, or affecting, interstate commerce.... We pledge...to support legislation providing for an effective program to promote industry and create jobs in depressed industrial and rural areas...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "The Eisenhower Administration will continue to fight for dynamic and progressive programs which... will: ...Protect by law, the assets of employee welfare and benefit plans so that workers who are the beneficiaries can be assured of their rightful benefits;...extend the protection of the Federal minimum wage laws to as many more workers as is possible and practicable;...provide assistance to improve the economic conditions of areas faced with persistent and substantial unemployment;...revise and improve the Taft-Hartley Act so as to protect more effectively the rights of labor unions, management, the individual worker and the public."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Minimum wage -- In 1957, 1958 and 1959, the Administration asked that the minimum wage be extended to additional workers.

Welfare Plan Protection -- The Administration also asked for legislation to require registration, reporting and public disclosure of full data on union health and welfare funds and disclosure of other union financial records.

Taft-Hartley -- Although in 1957 the Administration made no requests for the revision of the Taft-Hartley Act, President Eisenhower in a 1958 special message to Congress Jan. 23 asked that the law be amended to tighten restrictions on secondary boycotts, to make picketing for organizational purposes an unfair labor practice and to abolish the so-called "no man's land" between state and Federal jurisdiction over labor disputes.

In 1959, the Administration renewed it request for these Taft-Hartley changes. During Congressional debate on the labor reform bill, the Administration strongly backed the Landrum-Griffin version which subsequently was adopted.

CONGRESS

Minimum wage -- The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee in 1957 reported to the full Committee a bill (S 1853) to extend the $1 an hour minimum wage to about six million additional workers, but the Committee took no action. The House Education and Labor Committee held hearings on minimum wage legislation in 1957 but did not act. There was no 1958 action. In 1959, an amended bill (S 1046) extending coverage from 24.3 million to 35.0 million workers and raising the minimum for all but 3.5 million to $1.25 an hour won approval from the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee, despite Administration opposition. The bill was pending in the full Committee at the end of the session.

Welfare Plan Protection -- In 1957 both the Senate and House Labor Committees held hearings on proposed legislation to regulate welfare and pension plans but did not act. In 1958, however, a bill (S 2888) to require registration and annual reports from an estimated 40,000 pension funds, most of which were controlled by employers rather than unions, was enacted. Senate Republicans, fearing it would be their only opportunity during the Congress to vote on the Administration's labor reform program, attempted to amend the bill 15 times. Only one non-controversial amendment was successful and the bill was passed, 88-0 (D 42-0; R 46-0), April 28. A much-modified version of S 2888 was reported by the House Education and Labor Committee. The House passed its Committee version by voice vote Aug. 6 and in conference the Senate agreed to accept the weaker House bill. As finally approved, S 2888 contained no enforcement powers for the Secretary of Labor as had been asked by the Administration. Its chief provision required the administrators of employee welfare and pension plans to provide participants with annual financial reports on request and to file copies with the Secretary of Labor. The conference report was adopted by voice votes of both houses and was sent to the President Aug. 20.

Taft-Hartley -- No action on Taft-Hartley Act revision was taken in 1957. During the entire 85th Congress, however, the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field publicized labor union abuses. Legislation to strengthen the Taft-Hartley Act and to help correct these abuses was introduced in the Senate. The Kennedy-Ives bill (S 3974), covering some of the President's requests, required reporting and disclosure of union financial data, required the election of national and local union officials by secret ballot, prohibited organizational picketing for the purpose of extortion and partially closed the "no man's land" gap in the handling of labor disputes. When S 3974 reached the Senate floor June 12 it set off 53 attempts to amend the Senate Labor Committee version, 22 of which required roll-call votes. Although a host of minor amendments were agreed to, only one was added over the opposition of the bill's sponsors -- a proposal to extend the requirement that union officers sign a non-Communist affidavit and provide that the requirement cover employers as well. It was agreed to 66-20 (D 30-17; R 36-3), June 16. (The President had asked that the oath be dropped, not extended.) Republicans tried to add a series of controversial provisions opposed by organized labor. The key vote came June 13 when Republican Sen. H. Alexander Smith (N.J.) offered the first of several amendments endorsed by the Administration. The provision which would have permitted union members to sue persons mishandling union funds in Federal court, was rejected 42-47 (D 5-42; R 37-5). The bill was passed 88-1 (D 47-0; R 41-1), June 17. S 3974 died in the House, however, when it failed to get the required two-thirds majority vote under suspension of the rules. The vote on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected, 190-198 (D 149-61; R 41-137), Aug. 18. (259 "yeas" were required for passage)

In 1959, after seven months of debate, a labor reform bill was passed which included Taft-Hartley changes favored by the Administration but opposed by the Democratic leadership in Congress.

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee reported a bill (S 1555), sponsored by Kennedy and 12 other Members of the committee, almost identical to the one passed by the Senate in 1958. The Administration sponsored a bill containing its Taft-Hartley proposals but otherwise similar to the Kennedy bill. The bill finally passed, known as the Landrum-Griffin bill, came from the House and contained many of the Kennedy bill provisions as well as the Taft-Hartley amendments. The Kennedy bill had been amended on the floor to include a "bill of rights" for union members. It guaranteed union members "equal rights and privileges" to nominate candidates, vote for union officers and participate in union meetings; required secret ballots for raising of dues and initiation fees; protected union members who wanted to sue their union; required written charges in disciplinary action; required unions to furnish members with copies of collective bargaining contracts; permitted union members to file Federal civil suits against their union. The bill also provided extensive requirements for financial and other reporting with the Secretary of Labor. Special semi-annual reports were required of unions exercising trusteeships over union locals. Elections of union officers by secret ballot every three years was required. It also set up fiduciary safeguards for union members against officers who handled funds. The Taft-Hartley Act amendments: state labor agencies and state courts were permitted to take jurisdiction over "no man's land" cases and apply state law. In the future, the NLRB could not refuse to handle any case it would have handled as of Aug. 1, 1959. With exceptions in the garment and construction industries, the bill outlawed all existing or future hot cargo contract clauses under which an employer agreed in advance not to do business with an "unfair" or struck firm. Curbs were put on organization and recognition -- so-called "blackmail" -- picketing. The bill closed three secondary boycott "loopholes": it made it illegal for a union to induce or try to induce supervisors or a single worker to stop work in order to get their employer to stop dealing with another firm; it made it illegal for a union to coerce or threaten an employer to get him to stop such dealings; it brought rail, farm, airline and local government workers under the secondary boycott and picketing provisions.

In the House an amendment to substitute for a milder committee bill the language of the Landrum-Griffin bill which contained the Taft-Hartley changes was agreed to 229-201 (D 95-184; R 134-17). In the Senate an amendment to add the "Bill of Rights" provision to the bill was agreed to 47-46 (D 15-44; R 32-2).

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We reject the false Republican notion that this country can afford only a second-best defense. We stand for strong defense forces so clearly superior in modern weapons to those of any possible enemy that our armed strength will make an attack upon the free world unthinkable, and thus be a major force for world peace. The Republican Administration stands indicted for failing to recognize the necessity of proper living standards for the men and women of our armed forces and their families. We pledge ourselves to the betterment of the living conditions of the members of our armed services and to a needed increase in the so-called "fringe benefits."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We will maintain and improve the effective strength and state of readiness of all these armed forces. To achieve this objective, we must depend upon attracting to and retaining in our military services vigorous and well trained manpower, and upon continuously maintaining in reserve an enthusiastic and well-informed group of men and women. This will require incentives that will make armed service careers attractive and rewarding."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Defense Funds -- President Eisenhower asked Congress to appropriate $39.2 billion to run the Defense Department during fiscal 1960. This was about $600 million less than he requested for defense spending during fiscal 1959. The 1957 figure requested was $36.1 billion.

Military Pay -- A 1957 report of the Defense Advisory Committee on Professional and Technical Compensation, headed by General Electric Co. president Ralph J. Cordiner, proposed "a modern compensation plan to pay (military) people what their services are actually worth" and proposed a new military pay scale that the committee said would bring about a "15 percent improvement in...combat capacities without a significant change in the budget." In 1958 President Eisenhower proposed legislation to give incentive pay raises to the military to carry out the Cordiner Committee's recommendations.

Defense Reorganization -- In 1958, President Eisenhower asked Congress to help him reorganize the Defense Department by amending existing statutes that affected the Pentagon's set-up. Many of the plan's proposals could be effected without legislation, however, and during the year several of these changes were announced by Defense Secretary Neil H. McElroy. The Administration, in an April 13 special message, asked Congress to remove restrictions on the Secretary's power to assign combat functions and personnel, in order to establish "truly unified commands;" repeal the law that military departments "shall be separately administered by their respective Secretaries" -- a provision the President said amounted to "prescribing controversy by law;" give the Secretary full authority to eliminate needless duplication in research and development work, through a Director of Defense Research and Engineering; double the size of the Joint Staff, to 400 officers, to permit the Joint Chiefs to take on integrated operational planning; appropriate all defense funds to the Secretary, beginning in 1959, rather than to the separate departments, and give him flexibility in shifting funds to meet new military developments. (When the Administration's draft bill reached Capitol Hill, this last request was eliminated, having already met a volley of Congressional criticism.)

Defense Spending -- The upward spiral of defense expenditures was halted in 1959 for the first time since 1955. Total annual outlays, by fiscal years:

1955	35.5 billion
1956	35.7 billion
1957	38.4 billion
1958	38.9 billion
1959	39.8 billion
1960	39.2 billion (estimated)

Spending for all national security programs -- defense, foreign military aid, atomic energy and stockpiling -- continued to account for over half of all Federal expenditures. The portion of Federal funds spent on these programs remained on a higher level than that of the last pre-Korean conflict year (fiscal 1950). The percentage of the total U.S. budget spent on national security for the last 11 fiscal years:

1950	1951	1952	1953	1954	1955	1956	1957	1958	1959	1960*
32.5%	51%	67%	68%	69%	63%	61%	59%	60%	59%	56%

Manpower -- President Eisenhower in 1959 asked Congress to extend for four additional years the authority of the Defense Department to draft men into the armed services.

CONGRESS

Defense Funds -- In 1957, Congress approved defense appropriations that were almost $2.4 billion less than the President had requested. In 1958, Congress appropriated supplemental defense funds for fiscal 1958 totalling $1.26 billion, the amount the Administration had requested. It also approved transfer of $150 million of previously appropriated funds for the accelerated missile program. In 1958 it voted $816 million above the budget.

The fiscal 1960 defense money bill, sent to the President Aug. 4, 1959, totaled $39,228,239,000 -- only about $20 million less than the President had asked for.

Military Pay -- One year after the first Cordiner Committee proposals were made, Congress May 12, 1958, took final action on a military pay raise bill (HR 11470), generally based on the Committee's proposals. Average raises in basic pay ranged from 10 percent for Sergeants to 33 percent for Admirals and four-star Generals.

Defense Reorganization -- One of the most significant victories for the Administration during 1958 was passage of a military reorganization bill (HR 11958). Although it did not meet all of the President's requests, Mr. Eisenhower commented, when he signed the bill into Public Law 599, that "except in relatively minor respects, the bill adequately meets every recommendation I submitted to Congress."

Manpower -- A bill to extend the draft, as requested by the Administration, cleared the House Feb. 5, 1959, by a 381-20 roll-call vote (D 244-15; R 137-5). The measure also met little opposition in the Senate where it passed March 11, 90-1 (D 59-0; R 31-1), with the late Sen. William Langer (R N.D.) alone voting "nay."

Civil Rights Legislation -- President Eisenhower in 1957 again requested establishment of a bipartisan commission to examine charges of violations of civil rights and authorization of an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department to administer a new civil rights division. He made new requests for legislation to permit the Federal Government to seek from civil courts preventive relief in civil rights cases and legislation to aid in the enforcement of voting rights. As the civil rights bill was debated, President Eisenhower said several times that he wanted the bill to contain all of his original requests. He did not request additional civil rights legislation in 1958.

In 1959, President Eisenhower submitted a seven-point civil rights program to Congress:

1 -- An anti-mob bill, making interference with a Federal court school desegregation order a Federal crime.

2 -- Make it a Federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing a church or school.

3 -- Give the Justice Department the right to inspect voting records and requiring the preservation of those records.

4 -- Extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

5 -- Give statutory authority to the President's Committee on Government Contracts, which seeks to eliminate discrimination in private employment.

6 -- Authorize limited technical and financial aid to areas faced with school desegregation problems.

7 -- Provision of emergency schooling for armed forces children in event public schools are closed by integration disputes.

The President did not renew his 1957 request that the Attorney General be empowered to initiate civil suits to safeguard civil rights outside the voting field, and Administration witnesses opposed enactment of such legislation.

School Segregation -- President Eisenhower requested that his 1957 school construction program "be enacted on its own merits, uncomplicated by provisions dealing with the complex problems of integration."

Civil Rights Commission -- Under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, Congress created the Civil Rights Commission and a Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department. President Eisenhower in 1957 announced the appointment of the six members of the commission. In 1958, the President appointed Gordon M. Tiffany (R), former New Hampshire attorney general, as staff director of the new commission.

Justice Department -- Between Sept. 4, 1958, and Nov. 16, 1959, the Justice Department filed four voting rights suits under authority granted it by the Civil Rights Act of 1957. The legality of the first two suits, alleging discrimination in voter registration in Alabama and Georgia, was successfully challenged by the defendants in lower Federal courts and they were appealed by the Government to the Supreme Court. The last two suits, concerning registration procedures in Louisiana and a "white primary" in Tennessee, had not reached trial.

CONGRESS

Civil Rights Act of 1957 -- Congress approved a modified version of the Administration's civil rights bill (HR 6127). The bill established the Civil Rights Commission, authorized the Assistant Attorney General, prohibited attempts to intimidate or coerce persons from voting in Federal elections and empowered the Attorney General to seek an injunction when an individual was deprived or about to be deprived of his right to vote. The bill also provided that in all criminal contempt cases arising from the provisions of the Act, the accused, upon conviction, would be punished by fine or imprisonment or both, and specified when the accused could be tried with or without a jury. Qualifications for jurors also were outlined in the Act.

Congress Aug. 29 completed action on HR 6127, after both chambers agreed on a modified version of the Senate's jury trial provision. The House first voted 274-101 (D 124-86; R 150-15) to end debate on the provision. It then approved the provision itself by a 279-97 roll call (D 128-82; R 151-15). The Senate rejected 18-66 (D 18-26; R 0-40) a motion to refer the House-approved provision to the Senate Judiciary Committee. It then concurred in the compromise jury trial provision 60-15 (D 23-15; R 37-0).

1959 Civil Rights Legislation -- Legislation carrying out some, but not all, of President Eisenhower's recommendations was reported Aug. 20 by the House Judiciary Committee. But the bill (HR 8601) was held in the House Rules Committee for the remainder of the session. The Senate Judiciary Constitutional Rights Subcommittee July 15 reported a "skeleton" bill to the full Judiciary Committee, where it remained for the rest of the session.

School Segregation -- In 1957, the House by a 136-105 teller vote adopted an amendment to the school construction bill (HR 1) to prohibit use of Federal funds in any school district operating segregated schools in violation of the Supreme Court's integration ruling. The bill later was killed when the enacting clause was struck.

Civil Rights Commission -- The Senate March 4, 1958, by voice vote and without debate, confirmed the nominees to the six-member Commission. But it delayed in confirming the Commission's staff director, Gordon M. Tiffany. The Senate May 17, 1958, finally confirmed Tiffany by a 67-13 (D 30-13; R 37-0) vote.

In the final days of the 1959 session, Congress approved a rider to an appropriations bill extending the Civil Rights Commission for two years and appropriating $500,000 to it.

ADMINISTRATION

In his 1957 and 1958 budget messages, President Eisenhower requested statehood for both territories, but asked that the President be permitted, in the case of Alaska, to withdraw the northern and northwestern less populated areas for military uses.

The President, in his 1959 budget message, renewed his request that Hawaii be granted statehood.

CONGRESS

Congress in 1958, after several delays, enacted a law that would enable Alaska to become the 49th state of the Union.

As signed by the President the enabling act for Alaska's statehood: reserved a large area in North and Northwest Alaska for national defense purposes; granted Alaska the right to select 102,550,000 acres of vacant unreserved public lands along with the minerals on those lands; entitled Alaska to elect two Senators and a Representative to Congress and raised House membership to 436 until after the 1960 census; and stipulated that Alaskans accept the bill's conditions for statehood in a referendum election.

A Hawaii statehood bill (S 50) was reported by the Senate Interior Committee in 1957 but no further action on the bill was taken. In 1958, the House Interior Committee reported a Hawaii bill (HR 49) Aug. 23, the day before the 85th Congress adjourned.

Congress in 1959 cleared the statehood bill, also S 50, for the President's signature. President Eisenhower signed the measure March 18 and on Aug. 21 signed the proclamation formally admitting Hawaii into the Union as the 50th state.

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We pledge to continue our efforts... for a financially sound, more nearly self-sustaining postal service -- with the users of the mails paying a greater share of the costs instead of the taxpayers bearing the burden of huge postal deficits. We pledge to continue and to complete this vitally needed program of modernization of building, equipment, methods and service...."

Postal Rate Increase -- In his 1957 and 1958 budget messages, President Eisenhower asked Congress to raise postal rates so that the system might become self-supporting. In 1958 he asked for a 5-cent postal rate for all but local mail. Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield in 1959 asked Congress to increase the first class letter rate to 5 cents and the airmail letter rate to 8 cents.

Postal Workers Pay Raise -- The Administration in 1957 opposed a bill (HR 2474) to grant a $546 pay increase in the annual salaries of over 500,000 postal workers. Following approval by Congress, the bill was pocket vetoed by Mr. Eisenhower who said it would contribute unnecessarily to "inflationary pressures." But in 1958, the Administration requested a 6 percent pay raise for postal employees.

Fiscal 1958 Appropriations -- When Congress in 1957 cut the regular appropriations for the Post Office Department by $58 million, Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield said he would be forced to curtail mail services drastically unless the money were restored. President Eisenhower June 3, 1957 requested supplemental appropriations of $149.5 million which included the restoration of Congressional cuts and additional funds made necessary by an increased postal work load. Summerfield again said that unless postal funds were increased he would make sweeping cuts in service.

CONGRESS

Postal Rate Increase -- In 1958 Congress passed a bill (HR 5836) which boosted the first class letter rate from 3 to 4 cents and raised all other first class and second class mail by one cent. The bill also raised the rates for third and fourth class mail. As approved by the Senate Feb. 28, 1958 the measure carried the 5-cent rate sought by the Administration. The final compromise raised postal rates by about $550 million a year. The bill passed the Senate by 88-0 (D 46-0; R 42-0) May 21 and the House vote was 381-0 (D 196-0; R 185-0) May 22.

Postal Workers Pay Raise -- The 1958 bill (HR 5836) also raised the pay scales for 500,000 postal workers. As signed by the President, the bill authorized a permanent 7.5 percent increase for most field service employees and an additional 2.5 percent raise in some levels for three years.

We favor an increase in the present personal tax exemption of $600 to a minimum of at least $800.... We pledge ourselves...to the realistic application of the principle of graduated taxation to...corporate income (of small and independent businesses.)"

• 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "In so far as consistent with a balanced budget, we pledge to work toward these...objectives: Further reductions in taxes with particular consideration for low- and middle-income families; initiation of a sound policy of tax reductions which will encourage small independent businesses to modernize and progress; continual study of additional ways to correct inequities in the effect of various taxes."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Income Taxes -- In 1957, 1958 and 1959, the President asked Congress to postpone for another year scheduled reductions in the corporate income and certain excise tax rates. In 1959, he also requested enactment of a higher tax on the income of life insurance companies, a more restrictive rule for computing percentage depletion allowances and a new tax rule for cooperatives. The Administration opposed, in all three years, various proposals for selective tax reduction, on grounds that Federal revenues should not be reduced.

Excise Taxes -- In 1958, the President asked Congress to levy a tax of 3.5 cents per gallon on jet fuels and raise the tax on aviation gas from 2 cents to 3.5 cents per gallon. In 1959, in the absence of Congressional action, he asked for levies of 4.5 cents per gallon for both jet fuels and aviation gas, and for an increase in the motor fuel tax from 3 cents to 4.5 cents per gallon, to bring the Highway Trust Fund into balance.

Small Business -- In 1957 and 1958, the President asked Congress to help small business by revising tax law to permit accelerated depreciation on purchases of used property, payment of estate taxes in certain cases over a 10-year period, and partnership tax treatment for closely-held corporations.

CONGRESS

Income Taxes -- Despite much talk of the usefulness of a general tax reduction during the 1957-58 recession, Congress took no such action. In keeping with the President's requests, the legislators agreed in 1957, 1958, and 1959 to one-year postponements of scheduled reductions in the corporate income and certain excise tax rates (with exceptions noted below). An attempt in the Senate to tie a $6-billion package of income and excise tax cuts to the 1958 extension bill was rejected by a vote of 23-65 (D 20-24; R 3-41). In 1959, Congress approved a new formula for taxing life insurance companies, with the effect of raising their Federal tax from $300 million to $500 million. But no action was taken on the President's proposals respecting depletion allowances and cooperatives. Following adjournment, the House Ways and Means Committee launched a broad study of the entire Internal Revenue Code with a view to proposing a wholesale revision.

Excise Taxes -- Before passing the 1958 extension bill, the Senate voted 59-25 (D 33-10; R 26-15) to repeal the 3 percent excise tax on freight transportation, and voted 50-35 (D 27-17; R 23-18) to repeal the 10 percent tax on passenger transportation. As the bill was enacted, however, only the freight tax was repealed, at a cost to the Treasury of $485 million per year. In 1959, the Senate again voted to repeal the passenger tax, and by a 47-31 vote (D 44-7; R 3-24) to repeal the 4 percent tax credit allowed on income from dividends. But the House refused to go along, although it did agree to cut the passenger tax in half on July 1, 1960.

No action was taken in 1959 to levy a 4.5 cent per gallon tax on aviation gas or jet fuels. Congress did agree, however, to a one-cent increase in the tax on ordinary gasoline (from 3 cents to 4 cents per gallon) for 21 months, the House voting for the bill by a vote of 243-162 (D 138-127; R 105-35), and the Senate by a vote of 70-11 (D 43-9; R 27-2).

Small Business -- A technical amendments bill enacted in 1958 incorporated provisions giving small business an estimated $260 million in tax relief. Included were the provisions requested by the President (see above).

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Platforms

• 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We pledge ourselves to achieve an honest and realistic balance of the Federal budget in a just and fully prosperous American economy.... A fully expanding economy can yield enough tax revenues to meet the inescapable obligations of Government, balance the...budget and lighten the tax burden."

• 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We pledge to pursue the following objectives: Further reductions in Government spending as recommended in the Hoover Commission Report, without weakening the support of a superior defense program or depreciating the quality of essential services of Government to our people; continued balancing of the budget to assure the financial strength of the country...gradual reduction of the national debt.... We shall continue to dispense with Federal activities wrongfully competing with private enterprise and take other sound measures to reduce the cost of Government."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Balanced Budget -- In January of 1957, 1958 and 1959, President Eisenhower sent Congress balanced budgets for fiscal years 1958, 1959 and 1960 respectively, although at rising levels of expenditures and receipts. Actual spending, however, exceeded budget estimates in all three years, and deficits were incurred in fiscal 1958 and 1959. Figures shown are in billions.

	1958	1959	1960
Estimated expenditures	$71.8	$73.9	$77.0
Actual expenditures	71.9	80.7	78.9*
Actual receipts	69.1	68.2	79.0*
Surplus or deficit	-2.8	-12.5	+0.1*

*Bureau of the Budget estimates, Sept. 1959.

Both the fiscal 1958 and 1959 deficits reflected higher-than-expected expenditures and lower-than-expected receipts, resulting from the 1957-58 recession. During 1958 and 1959, however,

President Eisenhower carried on a continuing campaign to discourage further increases in Federal spending, vetoing several major bills passed by Congress in both years. His budget for fiscal 1961, to be unveiled in January 1960, was expected to call for an outlay of $81 billion and surplus of $1 billion or so.

National Debt -- With the help of a budget surplus of $1.6 billion in fiscal 1956 and again in fiscal 1957, the public debt was reduced from $274.4 billion on June 30, 1955 to $270.5 billion on June 30, 1957. Deficits totaling $15.3 billion in fiscal 1958 and 1959 boosted the public debt to $284.7 billion on June 30, 1959.

On June 30, 1957, the statutory ceiling on the public debt, raised to $300 billion during World War II, reverted to $275 billion. Faced with mounting deficits in fiscal 1958 and 1959, President Eisenhower in 1958 twice called on Congress to raise the ceiling, first by $5 billion, then by another $8 billion. In 1959, he asked Congress for a further temporary increase of $7 billion, to $295 billion, to permit the Treasury to finance the deficit normally incurred during the first half of each fiscal year.

CONGRESS

Appropriations -- President Eisenhower and the Democratic-controlled Congress clashed repeatedly in 1957, 1958 and 1959 on the question of Federal spending. In 1957, when Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey said that failure to reduce spending would lead to a "depression that will curl your hair," Democrats led the way in trimming $4.9 billion from the President's appropriation requests. But much of the cut was illusory, since Congress in 1958 had to appropriate another $4.9 billion to pay the Government's fiscal 1958 bills.

During the 1958 session, when the country was gripped by the recession and by concern over the Soviet leap into space, Congress appropriated funds freely, cutting Administration requests for fiscal 1959 by less than $1 billion; again, however, the cut was illusory, as another $2.9 billion in fiscal 1959 funds was voted during the 1959 session. Administration requests for fiscal 1960 were cut by about $1.9 billion in 1959.

Debt Limit Increases -- At the President's request, Congress raised the public debt limit in 1958 to $288 billion, with provision that it drop to $283 billion by June 30, 1959. A few days before that date, however, the temporary ceiling was again raised, to $295 billion, until June 30, 1960, when a permanent ceiling of $285 billion would become effective.

MONETARY POLICY

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "The first time-bomb of the Republican crusade against full prosperity for all was the hard money policy. This has increased the debt burden on depressed farms, saddled heavier costs on small business, foisted higher interest charges on millions of home-owners, including veterans, pushed up unnecessarily the cost of consumer credit, and swelled the inordinate profits of a few lenders of money."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "Consistent with the Republican Administration's accomplishment in stemming the inflation...we endorse the present policy of freedom for the Federal Reserve System to combat inflation and deflation by wise fiscal policy. The Republican party believes that sound money, which retains its buying power, is an essential foundation for new jobs, a higher standard of living, protection of savings, a secure national defense and the general economic growth of the country."

ADMINISTRATION

Inflation -- From 1956 through 1959 the consumer price index rose by 8 percent, and control of creeping inflation became the Administration's priority objective. Except for a period of credit ease during the 1957-58 recession, the independent but like-minded Federal Reserve System followed a policy of restraint, using its open market operations and successive increases in its discount rate to dampen credit expansion. Late in 1959 both short and long-term money rates had reached 30-year highs. Following a wage-price boost in mid-1957 by the steel industry, the President laid increasing stress on the need for non-inflationary labor contract settlements -- a position adopted by the industry in 1959 when a four-month steel strike was finally halted by injunction. But the President consistently rejected proposals that he be given standby wage-and-price controls.

Debt Management -- Rising interest rates proved costly to the taxpayer, helping to raise interest payments on the public debt to an estimated $9 billion in fiscal 1960. To give the Treasury greater flexibility in refinancing the $285-billion debt and to reduce the inflationary impact of excessive short-term borrowing from commercial banks, the President in 1959 urged Congress to remove the statutory ceiling of 4.25 percent on the interest the Treasury may offer on its long-term (five or more years) securities. He also asked for removal of the 3.26 ceiling on Series E and H bond interest.

CONGRESS

Inflation -- Administration monetary as well as fiscal policy remained under continuous attack from some Congressional Democrats, from 1957 through 1959. Increasingly, they sought to demonstrate that Administration efforts to dampen inflation, by holding down Federal expenditures and by restraining credit expansion, had worked to hold back the nation's economic growth. To develop the relationship of inflation and growth, the Joint Economic Committee was given $200,000 in 1959 to conduct a "Study of Employment, Growth, and Price Levels." The Committee's report, due in 1960, was expected to provoke further inter-party debate.

Debt Management -- The House Ways and Means Committee Aug. 18 voted to table the matter of removing the ceiling on long-term bond interest, but agreed to removal of the ceiling on Series E and H bonds. When this bill reached the House, an effort to amend it to comply with the President's first request was rejected, 134-255 (D 3-252; R 131-3). As finally enacted, the bill permitted the President to raise the interest on Series E and H savings bonds to 4.25 percent.

POWER AND WATER

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We pledge the resumption of rapid and orderly multiple-purpose river basin development throughout the country...(which) will bring into reality the full potential benefits of flood control, irrigation and our domestic and municipal water supply from surface and underground waters...(and will) materially aid low-cost power (and) navigation.... We pledge our aid to the growing requirements of the semi-arid western states for an adequate water supply to meet the vital domestic, irrigation and industrial needs of the rapidly growing urban centers.... We will take appropriate and vigorous steps to prevent comprehensive drainage basin development plans from being fragmented by single-purpose projects.... We will carry forward increased and full production of hydroelectric power on our rivers and of steam generation for the Tennessee Valley Authority to meet its peacetime and defense requirements. Such self-liquidating projects must go forward in a rapid and orderly manner, with appropriate financing plans...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We recognize that the burgeoning growth of our Nation requires a combination of Federal, state and local water power development -- a real partnership of effort by all interested parties. In no other way can the Nation meet the huge and accelerated demands for increasing generating capacity and uses of water, both by urban and agricultural areas.... In such partnership we are leading the way with great Federal developments such as the Upper Colorado project and with partnership projects of great importance, some of which have been shelved by the Democratic 84th Congress. In the marketing of Federally produced power we support preference to public bodies and cooperatives under the historic policy of the Congress. We will continue to press for cooperative solution of all problems of water supply and distribution, reclamation, pollution, flood control and saline water conversion...."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Hells Canyon -- Secretary of the Interior Fred A. Seaton in January 1957 said he would oppose any legislation for construction of a Federal dam at Hells Canyon on the Snake River near the Idaho-Oregon border.

Fryingpan-Arkansas -- The President in 1957 asked Congress, as he had in 1955 and 1956, to authorize Federal development of the Fryingpan-Arkansas reclamation project in Colorado. He did not repeat the request in 1958. In his 1959 budget message, however, the President again endorsed the authorization of the Fryingpan project, but asked that no appropriation be made "until the over-all budgetary situation is more favorable."

Niagara Power -- In 1957, the President again requested authorization of a Niagara Falls (N.Y.) power project.

Rivers and Harbors -- At a March 27, 1957 press conference, President Eisenhower said, referring to the rivers and harbors flood control and improvement program (S 497), "If anyone is interested in economy, let's...take...the great number of public works that are authorized without proper engineering studies to back them up. Congress authorizes them. Why? It must be for political purposes, because the Engineering Department has not said they were necessary."

In his 1958 Budget Message, the President asked that there be no new starts on rivers and harbors or reclamation projects in fiscal 1959 and asked Congress only to authorize funds for work started in prior years. When Congress went against his wishes and presented him with a $1.57 billion rivers and harbors bill, Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress, after he vetoed the bill, to enact a revised, new measure based on construction projects having Administration approval. He also asked for increased monetary authorizations for river basins where 1958 and 1959 fund requirements for projects under construction would exceed existing statutory limits.

In 1959, the President again asked Congress to provide no additional funds for starting new water resources projects in fiscal 1960. This "no-new-starts" stand caused him to veto two public works appropriations bills (HR 7509, 9105), but the second veto was overridden. In each of the bills, Congress provided funds for 67 new unbudgeted projects. In his first veto message Aug. 28, the President said the 67 new projects, estimated to cost over $800 million when completed, "ignore completely the necessity for an orderly development of America's water resources within the Nation's fiscal ability."

Trinity River -- In 1957 and 1958, the Administration recommended a "partnership" plan between the Government and the Pacific Gas and Electric Co. for the development of the Trinity River power project in California. In 1959, after legislation authorizing such a partnership was killed in Congress, the President said he would approve the appropriation of funds to begin Federal development.

TVA Financing -- For the fourth consecutive year, the President in 1959 included in his annual budget message the request that the Tennessee Valley Authority be permitted to finance the expansion of its power facilities through the sale of revenue bonds.

Flood Insurance -- The President in 1957 asked for funds to provide a Federal flood insurance program.

CONGRESS

Hells Canyon -- Congress in 1958 wrote an end to the long fight over Hells Canyon when the House Interior Committee refused to act on a bill (S 555) passed, 45-38 (D 40-5; R 5-33), by the Senate June 21, 1957. The House Interior Committee in 1957 had voted 16-14 to strike the enacting clause from a similar House bill (HR 5).

Fryingpan-Arkansas -- The Senate June 27, 1957, approved a bill (S 60) for construction of the project. The House Interior Committee Aug. 4, 1958 reported S 60, but the measure was permitted to die after its backers decided to make a fresh start in 1959, rather than risk defeat in the House. Further action was forestalled during 1959 because of a change in the structure of the proposed reclamation site.

Rivers and Harbors -- On April 2, 1958, Congress sent to the President a bill (S 497) authorizing a $1.5 billion program for river and harbor development. The measure was vetoed by the President April 15. The lengthy veto message listed objections to 28 projects costing $350 million. Congress then passed a revised bill (S 3910) that eliminated most of the provisions objectionable to the President. It was signed into law July 3 (PL 85-500).

The House June 9, 1959 passed, by a 380-20 roll-call vote (D 257-1; R 123-19), a bill (HR 7509) providing $1,177,177,000 in public works appropriations for fiscal 1960. By including funds for 75 new construction projects, 68 by the Army's Corps of Engineers, the bill thoroughly rejected the President's request for no new starts. The House Appropriations Committee report said there had been "overwhelming bipartisan rejection of the Administration's no new starts policy" during Committee hearings.

The Senate passed HR 7509 July 9 by a roll-call vote of 82-7 (D 55-2; R 27-5). Appropriations carried in the Senate version -- $1,256,836,300 -- totaled almost $80 million more than the sum voted by the House. In addition the Senate added 65 new planning and construction projects to the 75 approved by the House. Congress Aug. 17 sent a compromise version of HR 7509 to the President. It provided $1,206,748,549 in public works appropriations during fiscal 1960. The final version contained funds for 67 new works projects. Following the President's Aug. 28 veto of the measure, the House Sept. 2 sustained the veto, killing the bill for good. The roll call, 274-138 (D 263-6; R 11-132), was one vote short of the two-thirds majority necessary to overrule the President.

Congress Sept. 8 passed and sent to the President a revised bill (HR 9105) which differed from the original only by making an across-the-board cut of 2.5 percent in all funds. Retained in the bill were the 67 new starts on unbudgeted projects. The President vetoed HR 9105 Sept. 9 and the next day the House voted to override, 280-121 (D 260-5; R 20-116). The roll call produced 12 votes more than the necessary two-thirds. The Senate then acted quickly, also voting to override, 72-23 (D 60-2; R 12-21). It was the first time in President Eisenhower's seven-year Administration that Congress had been successful in nullifying a veto.

Trinity River -- A four-year battle between the supporters of Federal development of Trinity River and private power advocates appeared to have been resolved Aug. 11 when the House Interior Committee voted to table two bills that would have authorized a "partnership" development plan between the Government and the Pacific Gas and Electric Co.

On Aug. 12, 1959, a Senate-House conference committee agreed to include in the fiscal 1960 public works appropriation bill a $2.4 million item as the Government's initial investment in the Trinity River project.

TVA Financing -- The Senate Aug. 9, 1957, passed a bill (S 1869) to enable TVA to issue up to $750 million in revenue bonds to pay for new power plants. The roll-call vote was 61-20 (D 36-5; R 25-15). The House Public Works Committee Aug. 1 reported S 1869 but the bill died in the Rules Committee.

As the 1959 session opened, both Democrats and the President favored the principle of self-financing for TVA, but the Administration insisted that it should have the right to pass on TVA power projects. A bill (HR 3460) reported by the House Public Works Committee April 14 provided that the Congress had the right to approve or veto the projects. An effort to substitute the Administration's provisions was rejected by the House, 182-231 (D 41-227; R 141-4), and the bill was passed May 7 by a 245-170 roll-call vote (D 238-31; R 7-139). The Senate's version of HR 3460, passed by voice vote July 9, differed in several respects, but retained a degree of Congressional control which the President said conflicted with "his constitutional role in the legislative process" and was "wholly unacceptable."

The impasse was broken when the President signed the bill Aug. 6 (PL 86-137) on the understanding that the offending provision would be repealed. A bill (S 2471) doing that was promptly passed Aug. 11 and signed by the President Aug. 14 (PL 86-157).

Flood Insurance -- The House May 27, 1957 rejected, by a 97-127 teller vote, an amendment to a supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1957 that would have provided $14 million to initiate a Federal flood insurance program. The Senate May 20 added the provision to the bill. The House June 18 rejected by a 186-218 (D 127-89; R 59-129) roll-call vote a motion to concur in the Senate provision. The issue did not come up in 1958 or 1959.

Saline Water Conversion -- Although the Administration made no specific request for a saline water conversion program in 1957 or 1958, the 1956 Republican platform called for such a program. The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, in a May 19, 1958 report recommending an advanced program of development under the Saline Water Act of 1953, warned that the U.S. would need a proven new source of fresh water by 1980. The Senate June 10 and the House Aug. 12 approved slightly different versions of a resolution (S J Res 135) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to spend $10 million on building five demonstration plants for converting saline to fresh water. The measure went to the President Aug. 21.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "The Democratic party pledges itself ...to restore nonpartisan administration of the vital atomic energy program.... To accelerate the domestic civilian atomic power program by the construction of a variety of demonstration prototype reactors.... To give reality -- life and meaning -- to the atoms for peace program.... To increase the production of fissionable material for use in a stockpile for peacetime commitments at home and abroad.... To conduct a comprehensive survey of radiation hazards from bomb tests and reactor operations to determine what additional measures are required to protect existing and future generations from these invisible dangers...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "The Republican party pledges continuous, vigorous development of atomic energy: For the defense of our own country and to deter aggression, and for the promotion of world peace and the enhancement of our knowledge of basic science and its application to industry, agriculture and the healing arts.... More and more private funds are being invested (in the atomic energy industry) as the Government monopoly is relaxed. In relaxing its monopoly Government can stimulate private enterprise to go ahead.... The Atomic Energy Commission also is encouraging a vigorous rural electrification program by cooperatives."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

In a special message to Congress, President Eisenhower in 1957 requested ratification of the International Atomic Energy Treaty and said "the United States is under no obligation to disclose any secret information." In a June 23, 1958 message to Congress, Mr. Eisenhower asked that Congress approve "on an urgent basis" an international agreement between the U.S. and the European Atomic Energy Community to help build six nuclear power reactors in Europe.

Atomic Data Exchange -- At a December 1957 meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Paris President Eisenhower offered to share with other NATO members some of America's secrets in atomic matters. To make this possible, he asked Congress to amend the tight restrictions placed on release of information to other nations by the Atomic Energy Act of 1954.

CONGRESS

International Atomic Energy Agency -- The Senate completed action Aug. 20, 1957 on ratification of the Agency Treaty (Exec I, 85th Congress, first session). An amendment to the treaty to let Congress decide how and when fissionable materials should be turned over to the Agency was rejected by the Senate.

Euratom Agreement -- Congress acceded readily to the President's request for authority to extend financial and technical assistance to the newly formed Euratom. In separate actions completed Aug. 20, 1958, Congress approved an agreement for cooperation signed May 29 by the U.S. and Euratom to help build six nuclear power reactors in Europe.

In 1959, the President submitted a specific agreement calling for construction of the six reactors, participation in a joint research and development program and sale of reactor fuel to Euratom by the U.S. In the absence of Congressional opposition, this agreement became effective Feb. 18.

Atomic Data Exchange -- The Joint Atomic Energy Committee June 5, 1958 reported a bill (HR 12716) that authorized varying degrees of cooperation with other nations, but limited maximum disclosure to nations showing "substantial progress" of their own in the atomic weapons field (meaning Britain alone). This bill also gave Congress the right to veto, by concurrent resolution, any information exchange agreement negotiated with another nation, within 60 days of its submission. The House passed the bill without change June 19, 345-12 (D 181-9; R 164-3). The Senate followed suit June 23, after adding two amendments to tighten the bill's provisions still further. The final bill was accepted by the House June 27 and the Senate June 30.

In 1959, the President submitted to Congress atomic exchange agreements with seven North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries -- Great Britain, France, Canada, the Netherlands, Turkey, West Germany and Greece. All became effective, over minor Democratic opposition.

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We will give renewed strength to programs of economic and technical assistance (to underdeveloped countries).... The Democratic party believes the time has come for a realistic reappraisal of the American foreign aid program, particularly as to the extent and conditions to which it should be continued...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "We shall continue to support the collective security system.... Where needed, we shall help friendly countries maintain...local forces and economic strength.... We will continue efforts...to assist the underdeveloped areas of the free world...."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Mutual Security Program -- President Eisenhower asked Congress annually to extend MSP as follows:

1957 -- Authorize $3.9 billion, including $1.9 billion for military assistance and $900 million for defense support; grant continuing authorization for military aid portion of MSP; establish a Development Loan Fund with long-term authorization and $500 million for the first year; provide $169 million for technical cooperation.

1958 -- Authorize $3.3 billion (and appropriate an additional $625 million authorized in 1957 for the DLF), including $1.8 billion for military assistance and $835 million for defense support; provide $163 million for technical cooperation.

1959 -- Authorize $3.9 billion for MSP, including $1.6 billion for military aid, $835 million for defense support, $700 million for the DLF, and $180 million for technical cooperation; grant permanent authorization for military aid.

Loan Agencies -- The President in 1957 asked Congress to extend the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank for five years, and in 1958 to raise its total lending authority from $5 billion to $7 billion. In 1959, he asked Congress to approve U.S. membership in an Inter-American Development Bank, with a U.S. investment of $450 million, and to authorize increases in U.S. subscriptions to the World Bank and International Monetary Fund of $3,175,000,000 and $1,375,000,000, respectively.

Farm Surplus -- In 1957, 1958 and 1959 the President asked Congress for successive extensions of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (P.L. 480), authorizing the sale of surplus commodities for foreign currencies, as well as grants of commodities for relief purposes.

CONGRESS

Mutual Security Program -- Congress acted on the President's requests as follows:

1957 -- Authorized almost $3.4 billion for fiscal 1958, including $1.6 billion for military assistance and $750 million for defense support; refused continuing authorization for military aid; established the Development Loan Fund, authorizing $500 million for fiscal 1958 and $625 million for fiscal 1959. Congress finally appropriated $2.8 billion for fiscal 1958.

1958 -- Authorized $3 billion for fiscal 1959 (plus $625 million authorized in 1957 for the DLF), including $1.6 billion for military aid and $810 million for defense support. Congress finally appropriated $3.3 billion, including $1.5 billion for military aid, $750 million for defense support, and $400 million for the DLF.

1959 -- Authorized $3.6 billion for fiscal 1960 (plus $1.1 billion for the DLF in fiscal 1961), including $1.4 billion for military aid, $750 million for defense support, and $700 million for the DLF; authorized appropriation of "such funds as may be necessary" for military aid in fiscal 1961 and 1962; directed the President to submit plans in 1960 for progressive reduction of all non-military grant assistance. An Administration-opposed plan to permit the Development Loan Fund to borrow $1 billion a year from the Treasury for five years was defeated in the Senate, 42-48 (D 35-24; R 7-24). Congress finally appropriated $3.2 billion for fiscal 1960, including $1.3 billion for military aid, $695 million for defense support, and $550 million for the DLF.

Loan Agencies -- Congress agreed to the President's requests respecting the Export-Import Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank, and the International Monetary Fund. The Senate in 1958 also adopted a resolution, by a vote of 62-25 (D 39-3; R 23-22), calling on the Administration to study the feasibility of setting up an International Development Assn., as a World Bank affiliate, to make long-term, low-interest loans repayable in local currencies. IDA was endorsed by the Administration in 1959 and approved by the governors of the World Bank at their September meeting.

Farm Surplus -- Congress agreed to extend P.L. 480 in 1957 for one year, in 1958 for 18 months, and in 1959 for two years, until Dec. 31, 1961.

Aid Study -- Beginning in 1956, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee carried out an exhaustive study of foreign aid. Its report, filed May 13, 1957, said the objectives of the various parts of the aid program should be "separated, refined and restated." It recommended a revolving fund for development loans; it objected to a permanent authorization for military aid so long as "it is not clear to the Committee whether military aid is well adjusted to our total strategy of defense."

WORLD TRADE

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "We shall continue to support vigorously the Hull reciprocal trade program...." Administration trade policies have resulted in "serious economic injury to hundreds of thousands of Americans.... We pledge correction of these conditions."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "Barriers which impede international trade and the flow of capital should be reduced on a gradual, selective and reciprocal basis, with full recognition of the necessity to safeguard domestic enterprises, agriculture and labor against unfair import competition... We pledge faithful and expeditious administration of...escape clause and peril point provisions...."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Reciprocal Trade -- President Eisenhower asked Congress in 1958 to extend the Trade Agreements Act for five years and authorize him to cut existing tariff rates by 25 percent over the five-year period, in return for reciprocal concessions.

Tariffs -- In 1957 President Eisenhower increased import duties on spring clothespins and safety pins, but rejected Tariff Commission recommendations that he increase duties on velveteen fabrics, straight pins, violins and violas. In 1958 tariff actions, President Eisenhower refused to withdraw a concession on stainless steel flatware because of the Japanese voluntary limitation of exports and asked the Tariff Commission to report in 1959; did not act on Tariff Commission recommendations for increased duties on umbrella frames; withdrew concessions on clinical thermometers; set imports of lead and zinc at 80 percent of average annual imports for the period 1953-1957 with the quota set on a country-to-country basis; modified the 1939 import quota on long-staple cotton and removed tung nuts from the agricultural import list because imports were interfering with U.S. growers.

In 1959, the President established a tariff quota on stainless steel flatware but refused to modify concessions on tartaric acid and cream of tartar, as recommended by the Tariff Commission.

Trade Cooperation -- In 1957 and 1958 the President asked Congress to approve U.S. membership in the proposed Organization for Trade Cooperation, designed to administer the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Congress took no action on the request, which the President failed to repeat in 1959. The Administration, however, launched a concerted campaign late in 1959 to persuade its trading partners in GATT to eliminate remaining discriminatory barriers against U.S. exports.

CONGRESS

Reciprocal Trade -- Congress in 1958 approved a four-year extension of the Trade Agreement Act, until June 30, 1962. The law authorized the President to negotiate reductions in U.S. tariff rates by a total of 20 percent of the rates then in effect, but no more than 10 percent in any one year. He was also authorized to raise tariffs by as much as 50 percent of the rates in effect in 1934. Congress, however, wrote in a provision giving it the right, by a two-thirds vote of both houses, to override the President's disapproval of a Tariff Commission recommendation in escape clause cases. No attempt was made to do so, either in 1958 or 1959.

DISARMAMENT

Platforms

● 1956 DEMOCRATIC -- "To eliminate the danger of atomic war, a universal, effective and enforced disarmament system must be the goal of responsible men and women everywhere.... We pledge the Democratic party to pursue vigorously this great goal of enforced disarmament...."

● 1956 REPUBLICAN -- "President Eisenhower has given the world bold proposals for mutual arms reduction and protection against aggression through flying sentinels in an 'open sky.' We support this...."

Performance

ADMINISTRATION

Disarmament Policy -- The late Secretary of State John Foster Dulles in 1957 announced the Administration had decided on a "flexible" disarmament policy that would permit negotiations with Russia, but within limits to "safeguard the vital interests of the United States." In 1958 disarmament efforts centered on the possibility of banning nuclear weapons tests as the first step toward general disarmament agreements, and President Eisenhower proposed an international agreement on a one-year nuclear test ban not tied to production cut-offs. In 1959 the President ordered a broad review of U.S. disarmament policies aimed at "reducing the burden of armaments and contributing to...a just and durable peace." The U.S. made plans for 1960 participation in a 10-nation Disarmament Committee meeting in Geneva, and the White House said the U.S. viewed the negotiations as a "major opportunity" to progress toward "safe-guarded disarmament." The President, in a letter to Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), said "the best and most carefully elaborated disarmament agreements are likely to carry with them some risks, at least theoretically, of evasion," but that these must be weighed against risks of continuing "international competition in armaments." Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said he would give "very careful examination" to a proposal by Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev for a three-stage total disarmament.

Disarmament Talks -- In 1957 the U.S. joined in London meetings of the United Nations Disarmament Subcommittee, but the meetings ended after several months without any agreement. In 1958 U.S. and Soviet scientists met in Geneva to study whether devices for policing a nuclear test ban existed, followed by Geneva talks between the U.S., U.S.S.R. and Britain on test bans. The talks continued in 1959.

CONGRESS

In 1957 the Senate Foreign Relations Special Disarmament Subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Sen. Humphrey, recommended that the U.S. proceed "a step at a time" to conclude disarmament agreements. The Subcommittee in 1958 held hearings and issued a final report emphasizing the "new urgency" in the quest for arms control resulting from continuing development of space vehicles and weapons. In 1959 the Senate adopted a resolution (S Res 96) supporting the Government's efforts to negotiate an international nuclear test suspension.
